A REALISTIC LETTER.

We are permitted to publish the following interesting letter from our friend Fred. Mair, to his father, Mr. G. L. Mair:

1242 Fourth Avenue,
Sunset District,
San Francisco.

Dear Dad,—As I have not written to you in a long time, and having lots of time on my hands, I will write a little note to let you know I am still alive. I suppose by the time this arrives, beside me, says he thinks we are a "fine bunch of hell." You doubt you know more about the situation than we people here, but I'll do, as there are no papers or anything else, but I will tell you just how the earth quake struck me. I lived right in the heart of the city, right amongst the largest and highest buildings. At 5.15 o'clock in the morning I was wakened by the bed shaking, not very much, but just enough to make me think I was making it by the foot board, and as I have several of these little sensations every month, it paid no attention to it, but turned over to go to sleep again. But all at once the house gave a push up and down, just as the yacht would in a heavy sea, and our bed began to run first from the north to the south side of the wall, and run back again, until it got up quite a speed. I was still trying to get out of bed, but every time I got my feet to the floor I got a freight car, and knock me down again. By this time the whole house relied near the door of the bed room, and I made a jump for it and got it, managed to get up on my feet. Just then I heard a crash, and the roof fell, and the house went right up on end, and stopped with a jerk. At the same instant there was the greatest noise I ever heard in the world, as every bar building in the city fell with a crash, like thunder. My little cottage being an old fashioned one-storey affair, and not a high build, did not break at all, but just went up and down and but was you would stand a trunk on end.

Five minutes after the earthquake the fires broke out in flames, and thousands of people making for the parks. I packed all our valuables in two big trunks and two grips, all of no great kind, but there was none to be had, as every store in the city was shut up, either been killed or died of fright. So I left the city and went out home all days, in hopes the fire would not spread. But it was no use, as we might say soon was to get out of the way of it, as it was coming in chunks all of every way, we were glad to get out of it. I had to walk, but after walking about 10 miles I got a rig to make a start. We loaded all the stuff we had in it, and I walked behind and pushed it for a couple of miles, but after that I got a rig and made to work three days getting to the end of the fire, digging trenches for the dead. I have seen more dead people in the last week than I ever saw in my life before, and by no soldiers, for refusing to work, as no one is allowed to stay idle. I can't write any more.

FRED.

ANOTHER

Mrs. Mary McCormick, Newburgh, sends the following interesting letter from her daughter:

San Jose, Cal.
April 24th, 1906.

Dear Mother and Sisters,—We are alive and as well as can be expected after the earthquake. We were not hurt, but our home looks as if it had a big earthquake.

On the first floor of our house there is scarcely any place left to put the walls are simply torn. There are four large rooms on this floor and a hall. One of the rooms I used for a parlor. It had all my lovely china and glassware was in a cabinet. It is a total wreck. The door of my pantry for the purse in it, you would see the broken dishes. Only two rows of pouches for the second story is left standing. The rest smashed into kindling wood, and the plaster is nearly all off inside and the outside is nearly all off. The whole front of the building were broken in to the ground. There is no other damage that is done to our home. It is all right for us to live in and were we are thankful for the way we have got off, for there are thousands of people that have lost their homes or shelter, and not a mouthful to eat.

The earthquake came at 5.15 in the morning. I heard what I took for a bell, but I was awake, and I woke him and left the room. It was impossible for me to get out of bed, but I was thrown from one side to the other. I could not get up again and hold on to the door-casing, for the house shook like a vessel on the stormy sea. Thomas and I tried to go from my room to the door, but we could not get out, as we were afraid it would frighten her, so I had to go down the stairs and but I hung on to the side of the wall. Well, I got down and will send you a paper so you can read it.

From your loving daughter and sister,

B. ROBINSON.

Mother, don't worry about us, for we are all right. It is an ill wind that blows no man some good. One thing I forgot to tell you, we had a well on our place and it has been dry for years, and now it is full and running out at the top. What do you think of that?

RELATIVES UNHURT.

The following letter was received last week from Rev. H. V. Morgan, San Francisco, formerly of Roblin, by his sister, Mrs. Chas. Walroth, Overton.

Dear Sister,—Just a line to let you know brother Will and myself are safe and sound. Will's shop went up in a whiff of smoke, while the house is unhurt. We have nothing left but the few dollars we had in our pockets. I suppose you have heard the full particulars and the horrors of it could not be exaggerated. I viewed it the first night from the hills back of San Francisco. The quake at the time was nothing compared to the fire and burning in Frisco, as we both have good health, and will have a start in over again. 150,000 people left Sydney yesterday. Food is purring in by the carload, and there is no danger of famine.

Well, again, thanking God for his mercies for sparing our lives, and hoping for a letter from you soon.

Your brother,
HARRY

NEWBURGH.

One more the grain reaper has been in our midst. On Monday evening Master Ford, only son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Ford, died after a very severe illness. A week ago last Saturday he was taken ill, but nothing serious was feared until Wednesday, when Dr. Ostrom, Garrett and Beeman, decided an operation necessary. He was then taken to the Kingston General Hospital on Wednesday, where, on the doctors, assisted by Drs. Duff and Staples, performed the operation for appendicitis.

He appeared to be doing nicely until Sunday evening, when a change took place, and notwithstanding all that could be done, he passed away on Monday morning. The funeral took place from the home and was largely attended by the pupils of the village school, of which he was a popular pupil and among the men he was very popular. The floral tributes were numerous and were all very beautiful. The services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Bigg, assisted by Rev. Mr. Bell, of Napanee. The remains were laid to rest in the Methodist cemetery, Rev. Mr. Bell officiating at the grave. The pall bearers were Messrs. Ed. Hill, Ernest Hill, Ernest Ford, Ivan Ford, Ivan Hill and Ernest Hill.

Mrs. Ford has our sincere sympathy in her sad bereavement.

Unsolicited Testimony.

Here is the unsolicited testimony of Mrs. C. A. Martin, of Granville, N.Y., writing Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, Queen of Women. We have her consent to publish her letter. It reads as follows:

I feel that I should tell you what wonders Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets have done for me. I had been running down, getting thin in flesh, and losing appetite for the past year, and though doctor's advice was sought and different remedies were used, there seemed to be no improvement. At length a friend who had received great benefit from Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, advised me to try them. I did so. In less than a week I began to see good effects. My appetite returned, my nerves began to get steady, my aches and pains began to leave me. I commenced to take on flesh, and I felt that I was being rapidly restored to health. At this moment I feel I am a new woman.

We want you to notice that the above letter proves our claims for Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets in two particulars.

First, that they will restore health after other remedies and even physicians have failed. Mrs. Martin had tried both.

Second, that improvement begins at once. Mrs. Martin saw good effects within a week.

If you are suffering from a run-down condition, or any weakness peculiar to your sex, you, too, can be made well and strong by these tablets.

Take them one week and note the improvement in your feelings and general health.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Make Healthy Women.

EGLESON—DOWNEY.

A beautiful wedding was celebrated Wednesday, 25th April, at six o'clock, in All Saints' Church, Whitby, when Mr. Ernest Aikon Egleson was married to Miss Edith Thomson Downey, elder daughter of Mr. James H. and Mrs. Downey. The rector, Rev. A. H. Wright, officiated. The church was filled with full choral service. Mrs. Ayres presiding at the organ. The church was decorated with exquisite white flowers, palms and ferns. The bride entered the church on the arm of her father, the choir singing "Oh, Perfect Love, that Breathed O'er Eden." The wedding gown was of pattern lace over taffeta with veil and orange blossoms and a bridal bouquet of lilies of the valley was carried. Her little sister, Miss Ruth Downey, acted as maid of honor and wore a plain white silk dress with lace hat and carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses. The bridegroom was supported by Mr. Earl McDougall, of Montreal. During the signing of the register Miss Ruth Dunnet sang "Perfect Love." Following the ceremony a reception and wedding lunch eon were held at the residence of the bride's parents, at Byron and College streets, where Mrs. Downey received gowned in black lace over white silk silk with hat of white chiffon and pink roses. At the bride's table were four class mates of St. Hilda's College days —Miss Haney, Toronto, in grey silk voile; Miss Margaret Haney, Toronto, in blue silk voile; Miss Annie Ogden, Toronto, in allover lace Medallion over and Miss Scott, Oshawa, white lace over taffeta, with large picture hat. Other guests were Judge and Mrs. McIntyre and Miss Isabel Jenney, Mr. and A. H. Wright, Mr. George and Mrs. McCormack, Miss Jean Meredith, Mrs. Arthur Howden and Miss Annie Howden, Whitby; Mr. C. A. and Mrs. Scott and Mr. Chenowith, Oshawa; Mr. Arth ur Downey, Belleville; Mr. and Mrs. James, Mrs. Dr. Ward, Miss Nellie Herring and Mrs. Rogers, grandmother of the bride, Napanee, and Mrs. F. H. Shields, New York. The bride's travelling gown was a navy blue tailor made with hat to match. The newly married couple left by the Grand Trunk express for Montreal, Ottawa and the Maritime Provinces.

If you prefer to take medicine in tablet form you can now obtain Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets. Regular size and no change has been made in the medicinal ingredients. Sold by T. B. Wallace. 18d

Get SCOTT'S Emulsion

When you go to a drug store and ask for Scott's Emulsion you know what you want; the man knows you ought to have it. Don't be surprised, though, if you are offered something else. Wines, cordials, extracts, etc., of cod liver oil are plentiful but don't imagine you are getting cod liver oil when you take them. Every year for thirty years we've been increasing the sales of Scott's Emulsion. Why? Because it has always been better than any substitute for it.

Elijah Storr.

One of the pioneers of the Township of Richmond, died 15th April, in his ninetieth year. In the passing away of Mr. Storr one of the last links in the chain connecting the present generation with the pioneers of Lennox County has been severed. Full of years, he rests in peace, and beloved by all, he passed to his reward. Deceased was born at Selby, Yorkshire, England, in 1817, and spent his early years in that town. His father was a miller and he died, was when the postoffice was opened there, named after Mr. Storr's family. Elijah Storr, family, parents and cousins and aunts, and daughter, came to Canada in 1840. They first located in York County, then Toronto, later in Prince Edward County, and finally in the Township of Richmond. Elijah and his parents found their way to the vicinity of Lime Lake, in 1840-41, and settled on a new farm west of "Hog's Back," in view of where the Village of Marlbank now stands. Most of that section was then a wilderness. The main road had been partly cleared through the woods to Lake Ontario and Wagner's Mills, now Tamworth, but it was scarcely deserving the name of road. When Mr. Storr located there was a small settlement at Foxtail Mills, 6th concession of Richmond; the next was at John Wagner's mills, and the next back on Salmon River, which could only be crossed at Forest Mills. A man named Seldon kept a tavern at Davis' Corners. The road was scarcely passable for horses and wagon at that time, and the settlers had no markets, nothing but oxen and handmade wooden sleds, which they used summer and winter.

There were no shops or stores in the vicinity, and everything in that line had to be brought from Napanee, which was a full day's journey away, nor was there a postoffice any nearer. Mr. Storr delighted to tell of the early experience and hardships which he and his neighbors were called upon to endure. The settlers, or but a very few of them, were for some years unable to raise enough grain on their clearings for their own bread, let alone any to sell. Some made potash, which was the only staple which they could realize money. Notwithstanding all the privations and hardships these early settlers raised large and healthy families, who are now the bone and sinew of our country.

In the early days wolves and bears were a constant dread and danger to the settlers. In Mr. Storr's opinion it was not safe for the man to be out during the night. He remembers well the writer that the first night after his arrival, when he and his man had not yet built a shelter for themselves, they camped on a log of pork, and as soon as the odor of this was scented by the wolves, it seemed as if the whole vicinity became alive with them, and their howling and barking were kept up for hours during the night. A bright fire kept burning all night kept the wolves away.

One of the hardships felt by the early settlers was the lack of religious privileges. Mr. Storr, Methodist preachers on the Napanee circuit and Bay of Quinte circuit, Rev. Wm. Hall. Their circuit extended from Adolphustown on the west to Camden East, and up as far north as Wooler's Mills—twenty miles north from Mr. Corson was on how long to travel to fill his appointments, and he was met by Mr. Storr, who informed him of the settlement at Lime Lake, where a few devout persons met for prayer and singing, and for no more. This resulted in Mr. Corson making an appointment for preaching there every three weeks, and a class was organized and the Methodist church in that section organized. For some years thereafter the regular preachings were held alternately at the residences of Wm. and Elijah Storr.

A few years later Mr. Storr exchanged his farm for one at Carnarvon, not far from Forest Mills. His marriage to Miss Brennan, Prince Edward, a sister of the late Mrs. John Gilchard, of Napanee, took place soon after his settlement. After her decease he married Miss McBride, of Richmond, who with one daughter, Mrs. Angus McQuaig, survive him.

Of the first family are Wm. David, Mrs. Henry Symington, Mrs. Wm. Shenaw, Napanee, and Mrs. J. S. Sexsmith, Glenora.

Mr. Storr had a long and increasing municipal experience. For about twenty years he was a member of the Richmond Township Council, and for many years was reeve of that township. He represented Napanee constituted a part of the Provincial Parliament for a time. At that time were David Roblin, James Wilson, Thomas Dorland, Edmund Jones, Stevenson, Geo. Davy, Gilbert Clapp, Wm. Dafoe and Mr. Maddle, all of whom are deceased.

Mr. Storr was a member of the old United Counties Council, when Frontenac was a part of the municipality, and Kingston was the place of meeting. He was also for nine years a member of the Lennox and Addington County Council, and for one term filled the Warden's chair. He was always a warm and active partisan of the power, when the prerogatives, rights and privileges of a "Squire" presented a good deal more than they do today.

For two years ago Mr. Storr left his farm and came to live with his family, and his declining years were spent with friends, and he was able to see his beloved church, which he had wrought so faithfully for, and which he had helped so much, in more proportions to which the Methodist church in Canada has now attained.

FARMERS' FIELD MEETINGS.

The cost of labor in fighting weed, insect and fungus pests, which like the poor are ever with us, is one of the most serious problems with which farmers have to contend. The Seed Control Act has had the effect of increasing the price of seeds to farmers in their pure seed and of reducing the price for the low grade seeds, but even greater discrimination in prices is likely to follow. New seeds continue to be introduced. The trade in agricultural seeds has become the chief means for spreading them. The shipments for feeding purposes of screenings from Western grown wheat to the Eastern Provinces is responsible for another source of immediate danger which should not be overlooked. The noxious nature of new weeds that are thus introduced is not always seen or seldom well understood or their danger appreciated by farmers until they have become well established.

The Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture are more than ever alive to these dangers which threaten the farmer's crops and the crop production, and in the Eastern Provinces they are co-operating during this year in holding field meetings for the purpose of dealing with weed insects, fungus diseases and plant growth are now in operation.

Seventy of these field meetings are being arranged by Prof. H. L. Hutt, in connection with the Farmers' Institute System of Ontario. The services of Prof. Lochhead of the McDonald Agricultural College at Ste. Anne de Bellevue have been secured to conduct similar farmers' nature study meetings in the three Maritime Provinces.

Here is provided an opportunity for farmers to get at first hand, information that cannot be given or demonstrated in hall meetings during the winter months.

REMARRIED AND DIVORCED.

Dakota Paper.

Mrs. Annie Oderkirk has been granted a decree from Stephen Oderkirk. The last decree was signed this morning, 20th Feby., by Judge Dugas. Prejudice, after hearing the evidence in support of Mrs. Oderkirk's petition against her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Oderkirk were married about seven years ago, and are well known in Casselton, where Mr. Oderkirk conducts a hotel. They were first divorced in May, 1905, and were married again the following November. Cruel and inhuman treatment were the charges made by Mrs. Oderkirk, and she calls attention to a small scar on her face as her allegations as to her former husband's character. Mr. Oderkirk walks on crutches. One of his legs was amputated. She asserts it was his habit's fault, and says Oderkirk sat on the fire before falling asleep once. The limb had to be amputated to save his life. When she left Mrs. Oderkirk separated Oderkirk was given the custody of an eleven year old daughter. He took her to live with him, but returned in a few months to his wife. He told me that his wife would not come back unless I married Oderkirk again," said Mrs. Bernier.

The mother's love asserted itself and she consented to the marriage, not however until she had been assured that Oderkirk had graduated from a Keeley Cure institute. The troubles before were resolved into those of marriage, and another divorce action was commenced a few days ago when Mr. and Mrs. Oderkirk separated in 1905, a division of the property was made. Mr. Oderkirk took about $1,000 in cash, and Mrs. Oderkirk took the hotel in Casselton.

The ills of constipation are many, but trifling but they are frauds. Laxets bring relief to the most confirmed victim of constipation. Laxets are the discovery of a well-known medical specialist, and are not a patent medicine. They have taken years of study to perfect. T. B. WALLACE.

"I thought it," broke in Sir Andrew contemptuously. "Indeed, that deed was worthy of you—twenty, or more years against two."

Georgios held up his hand.

"Judge us not harshly," he said, speaking slowly, who, for his own ends wished to gain time, "you who have had the letter of our lord. See you were my commands. I was sent by lady Rose of the World as escort to night, but if possible without bloodshed. Now I was reconnoitring the country with a troop of the sailors from my ship who are but poor fighters, and a few of my own people, when my spies brought me word that he had ridden out attended by the night two men, and surely I thought that already she was in my hands. But the knights foiled me by their numbers and strength, and you know the end of it. So afterwards my messenger presented the letter, which, indeed, proved to have been done at first. The letter failed also, for neither you, nor the Princess—and he bowed to Rosamund—would be bought. More, the whole city was awakened; even the watch ascended with armed men; the knights of brethren kept watch and ward over land and town were about to fly from London, where it would have been hard to spare you. Therefore, because I speak I—who am a pagan and a trader, who also, although you remember it not, have crossed swords with you in times past, in this house of Harese—became dealer in drugged wine.

Now hearken. Yield you, sir Andrew, who have done enough to make your name a song of generations, and accept the love of Salah-ed-din, whose word you have, the word that, as you know well, cannot be broken, which is the lord El-Hassan—for this peasant man has been sent upon this errand—right to you afresh. Yield you, and save your life, and that of the Princess clinging to your own faith, till Azrael takes you from the pleasant fields of Paradise to the waters of Jordan, if such there be for infidels, however gallant.

"For know, this deed must be done. Did we return without the princess Rose of the World, we should be put to every one of us, and did we offer her harm or insult, then more horribly still. I can tell you, that I am the agent of a great king that drives him on to the stealing of a woman, although she be of his own blood, for the love of God has spoken to Salah-ed-din by the mouth of his angel Sleep. Thrice has Allah spoken in the night telling him who is merciful, that through your daughter and her noblenges alone can countless lives be saved; therefore, sooner than she should escape him, he would lose even the half of all his empire. Outwit us, defeat us now, capture us, cause us to be tortured and destroyed, and other messengers would come to do his bidding—indeed, they are already on the way. Moreover, it is useless to shed more blood, since it is written in the Books that this lady, Rose of the World, must return to the East, where she will be there to fulfil her destiny and save the lives of men."

"Then, smir El-Hassan, I shall return as a spirit," said Rosamund proudly.

"Not so, Princess," he answered, bowing, "for Allah alone has power over your life, and, it is otherwise decreed. Sir Andrew, the letter is short, and I must fulfill my mission. Will you take the peace of Salah-ed-din, or force his servants to take your life?"

The old knight listened, resting on his reddened sword; then he lifted his head, and spoke:

"I am aged and near my death, wine-seller Georgios, or prince El-Hassan, whichever you may be. In my youth I swore to make no pact with the Paynim, and in my old age I will not break that vow. While I can lift sword I will defend my daughter, even unto the last night of Saladin. Get to your coward's work again, and let things go as God has willed them."

"Then, Princess," answered El-Hassan, "bear me witness throughout the East that I am innocent of your father's blood. On his own head be it, and on yours," and for the second time he lifted upon the whistle that hung around his neck.

CHAPTER VII.

As the echoes of Hassan's whistle died away there was a crash in Pagomy the wooden shutters of the window behind them, and down into the room leaped a man. Before Sir Andrew could rise aloft. Before Sir Andrew could turn to see whence the sound came, that axe descended in a fearful blow between the shoulders which, although the ringed mail remained unshorn, bore his spine in twain beneath, so he fell, rolled on to his back, and lay there, still able to speak and without pain, but helpless as a log. Before he was paralysed, and never more would move hand or foot or head.

In the silence that followed he spoke in a heavy voice, letting his eyes rest upon the man who had struck him down.

The BRETHREN

By Rider Haggard, Author of 'King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan's Quartermain," "The World's Desire," Etc.

Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

"A knightly blow, truly; one worthy of a Christian bor who does murder for Paynim pay!" he stor to God and man, who have eaten my bread and now slaughter me like an ox on my hearth-stone, may your own end be even worse, and at the hands of those you serve."

The palmer Nicholas, for it was he, although he no longer wore the palmer's robe, stunk yay muttering, and was lost amongst the cowl in the passage. Then, with a sudden and a bitter cry, Rosamund swooped forward, as a bird swoops, snatched up the sword her sire would never lift again, and setting its hilt upon the floor, cast herself forward. But its points never touched her breast, for the amir sprang swiftly and struck the steel aside; then, as she fell, caught her in his arms.

"Lady," he said, loosing her very gently, "Allah does not send you yet. I have told you that it is not fated. Now will you pass me your word—for being of the blood of Salah-ed-din and D'Arcy, you, too, cannot lie—that neither now or afterwards you will attempt to harm yourself, for if you do not bind you, which I am loth to do—it is a sacrilege to which I pray you will not force me."

"Promise, Rosamund," said the hollow voice of her father, "and go to child; you were my commands. I am sent by lady Rose of the World as escort to night, but if possible without bloodshed. Now I was reconnoitring the country with a troop of the sailors from my ship who are but poor fighters, and a few of my own people, when my spies brought me word that he had ridden out attended by the night two men, and surely I thought that already she was in my hands. But the knights foiled me by their numbers and strength, and you know the end of it. So afterwards my messenger presented the letter, which, indeed, proved to have been done at first. The letter failed also, for neither you, nor the Princess"—and he bowed to Rosamund—"would be bought. More, the whole city was awakened; even the watch ascended with armed men; the knights of brethren kept watch and ward over land and town were about to fly from London, where it would have been hard to spare you. Therefore, because I speak I—who am a pagan and a trader, who also, although you remember it not, have crossed swords with you in times past, in this house of Harese—became dealer in drugged wine.

Now hearken. Yield you, sir Andrew, who have done enough to make your name a song of generations, and accept the love of Salah-ed-din, whose word you have, the word that, as you know well, cannot be broken, which is the lord El-Hassan—for this peasant man has been sent upon this errand—right to you afresh. Yield you, and save your life, and that of the Princess clinging to your own faith, till Azrael takes you from the pleasant fields of Paradise to the waters of Jordan, if such there be for infidels, however gallant.

"For know, this deed must be done. Did we return without the princess Rose of the World, we should be put to every one of us, and did we offer her harm or insult, then more horribly still. I can tell you, that I am the agent of a great king that drives him on to the stealing of a woman, although she be of his own blood, for the love of God has spoken to Salah-ed-din by the mouth of his angel Sleep. Thrice has Allah spoken in the night telling him who is merciful, that through your daughter and her noblenges alone can countless lives be saved; therefore, sooner than she should escape him, he would lose even the half of all his empire. Outwit us, defeat us now, capture us, cause us to be tortured and destroyed, and other messengers would come to do his bidding—indeed, they are already on the way. Moreover, it is useless to shed more blood, since it is written in the Books that this lady, Rose of the World, must return to the East, where she will be there to fulfil her destiny and save the lives of men."

"Then, smir El-Hassan, I shall return as a spirit," said Rosamund proudly.

"Not so, Princess," he answered, bowing, "for Allah alone has power over your life, and, it is otherwise decreed. Sir Andrew, the letter is short, and I must fulfill my mission. Will you take the peace of Salah-ed-din, or force his servants to take your life?"

The old knight listened, resting on his reddened sword; then he lifted his head, and spoke:

"I am aged and near my death, wine-seller Georgios, or prince El-Hassan, whichever you may be. In my youth I swore to make no pact with the Paynim, and in my old age I will not break that vow. While I can lift sword I will defend my daughter, even unto the last night of Saladin. Get to your coward's work again, and let things go as God has willed them."

"Then, Princess," answered El-Hassan, "bear me witness throughout the East that I am innocent of your father's blood. On his own head be it, and on yours," and for the second time he lifted upon the whistle that hung around his neck.

SCIATICA CURED AFTER TWENTY YEARS OF TORTURE.

For more than twenty years Mr. J. H. Massey, of 5322 Clinton St., Minneapolis, Minn., was troubled with sciatica. The pain and suffering which he endured during that time is beyond comprehension. Nothing gave him only temporary relief until he used Chamberlain's Pain Balm. One application of that liniment relieved the pain and made sleep and real possible and less than one bottle has effected a permanent cure. If troubled with sciatica or rheumatism why not try a bottle of Pain Balm? It will do wonders for yourself how quickly it relieves the pain. For sale at The Bel-House Drug Store. 18d

"Slay me, then, and have done with it," he said, "for I will not."

"Nay, I will not slay you, lest you should say that I have taken vengeance for my own hurt. Rise, and get you gone, and may God have mercy on your soul!"

"Not without my sword, which I have won in fair fight."

"Nay, you shall not have it

ODESSA.

On Friday evening last a banquet was tendered to Mr. H. Travers, manager of the Crown Bank, by his many friends and well wishers of this place and surrounding country, previous to his removal to Napanee, as Bank Manager there. Some forty friends convened at the Dominion Hotel, where a repast was spread, which would satisfy the most epicurean taste. After supplying the inner man, the chairman called upon several for after dinner speeches, which were responded to with alacrity in which Mr. Travers was highly complimented on his ability as Bank Manager, his geniality and his readiness to accommodate at all time those who might need an accommodation. One and all expressed their sorrow that he was removed from here, but ended by saying what would be Odessa's loss would be Napanee's gain. In his reply Mr. Travers averred in his sorrow to leave so many pleasant friendships which he had formed, that he received kindness from all with whom he came in contact, and would not forget them, and ended by saying he would be glad to welcome to his home any who might call upon him. After which "God save the King" was sung, and the meeting dispersed, all seeming to have enjoyed themselves.

—Prof. W. R. Graham manager of the Poultry department of the Guelph Agricultural College, delivered two very interesting poultry lectures in the Town Hall on the afternoon and evening of Saturday last. He devoted the greater part of his remarks to a discussion on the successful management of incubators, and laid special stress on the value of thoroughbred fowl in increasing the egg production and the better prices realized for dressed fowl, as had been proven by experiments carried out at the College. The Napanee Poultry Association deserve credit for their efforts in the direction of improvement of the poultry industry in this district by having lectures given by such an able man as Prof. Graham is recognized to be.

THOUSAND DOLLARS WELL INVESTED

Among the latest reports to public duty in banking circles is the Colonial National bank of Hallett, North Carolina, which at the beginning of 1905 was launched upon a modest campaign in the local newspapers. The summing up of results at the end of the year showed an increase of over $100,000 in deposits and a gain of $25,000 in assets, at an expense of less than $1,000 for advertising. The gain in deposits during the preceding prosperous year before the ads were published, had been but $66,000, and in assets only $104,000. The figures tell their own story.—Advertise in The Beaver.

PETER TIMMONS.

On Friday, April 20th, Chippewa lost one of its most prospected residents, and the church one of its ablest and most devoted supporters, in the person of an old pioneer, Peter Timmons. He was a conspicuous personality among the Enterprise, and his name was so familiar to that community's history that a sketch of his career would add very little information to what is already known by nearly everyone. His life was an illustrious example of an honest, straight-forward man, whose word was ever as good as his bond.

He was 87 years of age, being born in Wicklow, Ireland, in the year 1819, and has resided since in Chippewa. From there his first marriage took place and his home training mapped out for him a vigorous, energetic life. He was a conspicuous personality among the early pioneers

Frost Fences Are Strong All Around

The literals of a Frost Fence are High Carbon No. 9 Hard Steel Coiled Wire, thoroughly galvanized—that can't be broken until the strain reaches from 1500 to 2000 pounds.

The stays are No. 7 or this same No. 9 wire.

And the two wires are locked with the Frost Locks

That braces the fence in all directions—up down and diagonally.

We give no wire that Frost Fences are the strongest and best that we guarantee to replace, free of charge, any fence that goes wrong. That's fair, isn't it?

Dafoe's Manitoba Patent

By numerous tests by the Bread bakers the above mentioned grades have been proven to be the best flours in the market.

When buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and patronize your home mill, thereby producing Bran and Shorts that you can purchase cheaper than the product of the Western mills, which has to be transported thousands of miles, at great expense and usually, when it reaches you, of inferior quality.

The grocer complains if the farmer or the mechanic sends to Toronto or to outside points for an article he can get at the home store just as good, but he does not hesitate to buy flour from mills hundreds of miles away and sell you an inferior flour for more money than you can purchase the home product for, every bag of which is guaranteed.

Choice corn meal and buckwheat flour always on hand. Feed grinding a specialty, with the best feed mills known to the trade.

A full stock of the best Anthracite coal also in the market for the purchase of all kinds of grain.

Ask for prices at the Big Mill, before purchasing your Flour, Feed or Coal.

A Daring Distribution

The undersigned Druggist at the earnest solicitation of the Ferrol Co., Limited, of Toronto, has made a thorough and searching investigation into the merits of FERROL, and of the methods of that Company, and he finds that: Every cure claimed by the Company is absolutely genuine; that FERROL is manufactured from the best quality of Munn's Celebrated Cod Liver Oil (the whole of the oil) and is richer in oil than any other emulsion, and while it contains just the right quantity of the best form of Iron and Phosphorous, it is so scientifically prepared, that not one in a thousand finds any trouble in taking it; that the medicine has accomplished the most amazing results in its own city; that its sales in the Home City have been phenomenal; that it is endorsed by all druggists without hesitation or qualification; that it is, ir short, all the Company claims for FERROL, and more.

The more I investigated the more enthusiastic I became. It is no longer a question of my willingness to handle the preparation—FERROL—but how can I brir it to the immediate suffering of this city!

It is a heavy responsibility, but I have faith in the honesty and fairness of the Ferrol Company, Limited, of Toronto, and the unequalled merits of their preparation, FERROL.

(Signed) FRED. L. HOOPER.

I find also that the druggists in other cities have taken upon themselves the solemn responsibility of standing behind this medicine; and that these druggists have made in each city a daring and remarkable distribution of full-sized bottles.

Impressed by the action of my fellow-druggists, and convinced that they would not have given this remedy such unqualified approval without positive knowledge of its merits, I have decided to follow their example and distribute free of charge

200 Large Bottles of FERROL Free to the Sick

AT FRED. L. HOOPER'S DRUG STORE---MEDICAL HALL

Beginning Monday, April 30th.

Maintaining a first-class Drug Store, the above named Druggist occupies a commanding position in the retail drug trade of this city, and almost every remedy that is offered to the public seeks an outlet through his store. But with an eye single to the interests of his many patrons he is careful to handle the most reliable preparations. Consequently when a medicine is recommended and endorsed by this Druggist, that medicine must have merit.

The above Druggist, after a rigid investigation, described elsewhere in this announcement, has decided to make, upon his own responsibility, the most remarkable distribution of medicine ever attempted in this city. Convinced by personal experience of the extraordinary merits of he has purchased from the Ferrol Co., Limited, of Toronto, two hundred large sized bottles of this remedy, for free distribution, and he hereby invites every person suffering from any form of blood trouble; any person who is run down, discouraged and in need of a powerful tonic; any person suffering from Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Croup and all Bronchial or Lung Trouble, Chronic Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Insomnia, Loss of Weight and all wasting diseases; any person who has sought relief in any other remedy or Cod Liver Oil preparation, and failed to find it, cut out the certificate printed herewith, fill out the blank lines, present it at the store on the dates given, and get a bottle of this wonderful preparation, FERROL, Free.

It was necessary for me to purchase a large quantity in order to have the privilege of making this free distribution, and the responsibility assumed by me in this matter, I am positive will be appreciated by the public, and the immense sales that are sure to follow will more than compensate me for the expenditure involved.

There is absolutely no sentiment in this endorsement of FERROL. It is merely a business recognition of a preparation that possesses positive merit, and a keen desire on the part of a progressive concern to always supply the best goods at the lowest possible price.

THIS CERTIFICATE,

Properly filled out and signed, entitles the holder to one large sized bottle of FERROL (Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorus), if presented at FRED. L. HOOPER'S Drug Store, beginning April 30, from 9 a.m. until samples are exhausted.

Name of Patient,.....

Address,.....

Disease,.....

The bearer of this certificate hereby solemnly agrees to give this medicine a thorough and faithful trial and to report to the druggist named above, within three weeks, the improved condition of his health that is almost absolutely certain to follow.

No other distribution will be made, and it will be necessary for you to come early in order to be sure of securing a large size bottle of FERROL ABSOLUTELY FREE

REMEMBER, only ONE bottle will be given to each family. Tell your friends of this Wonderful Offer for fear they will not see this advertisement.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

At a christening in the wilds of Missouri, while the minister was recording the event he happened to say:

"Let me see—isn't this the 27th?"

"I should say not," retorted the indignant mother. "It's only the ninth."

An End to Bilious Headache.—Biliousness, which is caused by excessive bile in the stomach, has a marked effect upon the nerves, and often manifests itself by severe headache. This is the most distressing headache one can have. These are headaches from cold, from fever, and from other causes, but the most surprising thing of all is the bilious headache. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will cure it—cure it almost immediately. It will disappear as soon as the Pills reach the stomach. There is nothing surer in the treatment of bilious headache.

"I want to know," said the rate maitron, "how much money my husband drew out of this bank last week." "I can give you that information, ma'am," answered the man in the cage, "You're the society belle, aren't you?"

"Yes, but I'm not the telling payer."

They Are Not Violent in Action.—Some persons, when they wish to cleanse the stomach, resort to Epsom and other purgative salts. These are speedy in their action, but serve no permanent good. Their use produces decipient chills, and if persisted in they injure the stomach. Nor do they act upon the intestines in a beneficial way. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills answer all purposes in this respect, and have no superior.

Teacher—What is the difference between lightning and electricity?

Bright Pupil—Lightning is free, and electricity costs money.

Always a Good Friend.—In health and happiness Ayer's Pills need no friends but when pain and prostration come we look for friendly aid from sympathetic hands. These hands can serve us no better than in rubbing in Thomas' Eclectric Oil, for when the Oil is in the pain is out. It has brought relief to thousands who without it would be indeed friendless.

Representative Rodenberg of Illinois has a nephew who attends a private school in Washington. He came home the other day and proudly informed his uncle that they had an election at school.

"We voted for Roosevelt and Parker," he announced.

"Who won?" asked Mr. Rodenberg.

"Why, Roosevelt got 30 and Parker got 1," the boy said. "You see, Sammy Smith didn't know how to spell Roosevelt, so he voted for Parker."

If your children moan and are restless during sleep, coupled, when awake, with a loss of appetite, constipation, picking at the nose, etc., you may depend upon it that the primary cause of the trouble is worms. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator effectually removes these pests, at once relieving the little sufferers.

Reporter—Uncle, to what do you attribute your long life?

Oldest Inhabitant—I don't know you young fellar. They're several of these patent medicine companies out now that's claimin' the credit, but I'll bet a dollar they don't live as long as I have.

Casey—The doctor sez what I nov is insanity.

Cassidy—Oh, shure. We've had that trouble ourself, an' there's only wan cure for it.

Casey—What's that? What d'ye do?

Cassidy—Hint go to sleep an' forgit all about it.

Nothing looks more ugly than to see the person whose hands are covered over with warts. Why have these disfigurements on your person when a sure remover of all warts, corns, etc., can be found in Holloway's corn cure.

Cholera and all summer complaints are so quick in their action that the cold hand of death is upon the victim before they are aware that danger is near, if attacked do not delay in getting the proper medicine. Try Diarrozone, D. D. D. Kidgar's Dysentery Cordial, and you will get immediate relief. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

HOW TO CURE TOOTHACHE.

Any aching tooth can be relieved instantly with Nerviline. Fill the cavity with batting dipped in Nerviline and rub the gums with Nerviline also. If the face is swollen and sore bathe the painful parts with Nerviline and cover with a flannel. This can't fail because Nerviline kills the pain outright and prevents it from returning. Stronger, quicker, more satisfactory than any other liniment. Poison's Nerviline has been the largest seller for nearly fifty years; try it yourself.

CLEVER AMATEURS.

The Bath Amateur Dramatic Club made their first appearance before a Napanee audience on Tuesday night, in the new Opera House. There was a fairly good attendance and those present were astonished at the able way in which the comedy drama "Happy Hollow," was put on the stage, and the ability of the company as a whole. Mr. W. Tuckett is the star of the party, and his presentation of Ezekiel Harkins, an up-to-date farmer of the sod, was highly commended on all hands. We are pleased to state that the entertainment will net a tidy little sum for the benefit of Bath Public Library.

THE BIJOU COMEDY CO.

H. A ROYAL SLAVE.

Mr. Harry Gordon, who has given us many of the best attractions that have appeared here in past seasons, promises us the best effort of his career in his new production, "A Royal Slave," which comes to the Bijou Opera House on Wednesday next, 9th May. The critics throughout the country have been lavish in their praise of this new play and pronounce it one of the most worthy productions that has been seen here in recent years. After so many of the cheap, trashy melodramas that we have had recently, "A Royal Slave" will be a welcome diversion. Not only is the play of a high standard, but the magnificent war in which Gordon & Bennett have mounted it is largely responsible for its unusual success. Popular prices. Plan at S. G. Hawley's.

As new regulations are out to the effect that all names of parties wishing to enlist must be on the service roll eight days before camp, Lieut. F. R. Mayhee wishes those requisiting to join the company this year to hand in their names or write at once. The new regulations are imperative and no person will be taken into camp unless his name appears on the service roll, sent in at the date mentioned. The pay will be the same as last year, and a first-class company is expected. The 47th band will accompany the boys to camp this year. Uniforms, etc., will be given out from this date until the close of the enlistment. Be sure and call or write to Lieut. F. R. Mayhee, who will explain all details to any person wishing to go with him.

Mr. Geo. Ellsworth was invited to St. Andrew's church, on Friday evening last, to meet the members of the choir, on the occasion of the choir's anniversary. Mrs. Elliott, wife of the pastor, is leader of the church, when the following address was read by Mr. Geo. Ellsworth, on behalf of the choir, in the absence of Mrs. Elliott:—

Mrs. Elliott—We are met here tonight as representatives of the choir of St. Andrew's Church, to bid you farewell, as we have learned that you have decided to separate yourself and family from our congregation. We do not come to persuade you to turn amongst us without your services in the general work of the church, but to express our appreciation of your services in the special work of the choir, which you have so faithfully and freely and willingly rendered on all occasions, but your home has always been willingly opened for rehearsals whenever you saw that the church needed it. You have always been a shining light in the church, from which place we are sure you will be missed, not only by the members of the choir, but by the congregation as well. We hope and trust that you will long continue to work for Christ and the Church wherever you may be called to labor, and that our loss will be others' gain, and we ask you to accept this hymn, Bible and purse, as a slight token of our esteem in which you are held by the church, not for its transient value, but as a token that you could not pay you for the services you have rendered to the church, but we would you desire it, you have, done these things for Christ's sake, and His name, feeling that you are only doing your simple duty, and trusting service brings its own reward in the end. We also accept this hymn, as every good gift keep you and bless you, so that you may be a blessing to all that have above, where partings will be no more. Signed on behalf of the congregation,

Miss Maggie Gilmore,
Mrs. G. H. Richardson,
Mrs. Harry Mulligan.

Mrs. Elliott replied by thanking the people very kindly for the present, and for the kind way they had in which they all joined in singing "God be with you till we meet again."

KILLED ON THE CARS

On Sunday morning last, as the two o'clock train for the west, pulled in to the station a young man about twenty years of age was found dead between the baggage cars. Three other young men who were stealing a ride, arrested. From the appearance of the young man he had only been dead a short time as his body was still warm. He was a stranger to all. The other three say they do not know his name, but from a paper found upon the person it is supposed his name is Fred King. The paper shows that he resided at Glasgow, on the 19th April, on the steamer Castelia, for five shillings presumably to work his way over for that amount. He was dressed as a working man and nothing else of value was found upon his person. He is probably a Canadian, returning from crossing the Atlantic with a cattle ship.

The supposition of the cause of the accident is that the young man was upon the cars and in coming around a curve he lost his head not to see where he was and the cars closed again with the platform where coming through it, bruise on the head is made as if the man caught him and when their rights he fell back. From what trails men say the cars where caught by the train Conductor, Patrick Flood, Montreal, and Richard Chadwick, Omaha, Neb. The three are held in the jail, pending investigations. The three are about twenty years of age or under.

THE INQUEST

At 7.30 Wednesday evening Dr. Cowan, coroner for the county, and Mr. H. M. Deroche, K.C., was present on behalf of the Crown, and Mr. McDougall, of Montreal, looked after the interests of the C.P.R. The following was the jury panel: Messrs. E. S. Lapum, foreman; John Jennings, Napanee; H. W. Kelly, Bath; Dan. Gow, N. Smith, Chas. E. J. Pollard, F. W. Hart, Wm. M. Mayhew, Albert Dawson, Napanee.

Conductor James Garrett and Brakeman John Stansberg and Michael Cusack, of the train in charge when the finding of the body and bringing it to Napanee. Each brought in the evidence as heard from a question between the cars.

Thomas Sweetman, car inspector at Kingston, said he discovered a quantity of blood on the floor of the platform on the west bound track, about 600 feet from the station. This was about after No. 5 left for Napanee, while coming from the west. He told the operator telegraph to Napanee. He identified the body and said that he observed man coming into the yard at Kingston.

Chief Graham gave an account of having the body taken to undertaking rooms, and identified the articles taken from the pockets of deceased, and the change found. Identified a Gasgow Also a letter received from Mrs. Thompson of Bath, Ont., inquiring about an Englishman named King, who had left there for Glasgow. She said she lent her family came to Canada in the spring of 1905, and a young man named King. She asked for a description of the body found, which is the same person.

Dr. Ryan, surgeon of the G.T.R., described the appearance of the body when he first saw it, and the position in the baggage room at the station. He thought that the body had been dragged, that the accident had happened at Kingston, as the cut on the head could not have occurred when the train stopped on the ground, or if it had, the blood would have flowed in cold enough to have occurred two or three hours previously at Napanee. The injury to the head was sufficient to cause death. The body was bruised and the bones loosened and broken in many places, and the arms on one side of the abdomen.

The jury brought in a verdict of accidental death, in accordance with the evidence, exonerating the crew of the G.T.R., and acquitted the three prisoners charged with no way responsible for the death of King. They were set free on Thursday morning.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Are just for women and Contain just what every Sick and Run-down Woman Needs.

Do you know that distinguished physicians say that ninety per cent. of the ills of women result from your peculiar organism.

This should make clear to you the need and advantage of taking a remedy that contains utmost and female tonics.

You know, of course, that remedies made to sell to men as well as women do not contain these. They cannot.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women (not for men) contain them all, and you don't have to take our word for this. Chemists and physicians, whose standing makes their statements reliable, say that not one single medical ingredient or any value to women has been omitted from them.

What is the result? Simply this. When you buy a box of these tablets you get a remedy compounded just for your special needs, and one containing all that medical science can supply in this twentieth century to make you a healthywoman. What more could you ask?

And unless your experience should be different than that of other women, you need nothing more. If you don't feel as well as you would like to, try these tablets.

They Make Healthy Women.

You have No Reason for Not Using Zutoo

Some people think that all headache cures are alike—that they all undermine the health, even if not perceived at the time of taking them.

Well, we'll admit that the drug cures do this, but that is no reason why you should not take Zutoo.

Zutoo is a harmless vegetable remedy. One ingredient is soda—just old-fashioned soda that our grandmothers used to use to settle the stomach, when they had sick headache. And there is nothing better.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. We wont hurt you any more than will the soda.

There is absolutely no reason why you should not use Zutoo.

If you suffer from headache there is every reason why you should.

Taken in time, two tablets will ward off a headache. Taken later, they will stop it in twenty minutes, and quickly you feeling good every tithe.

If you are using a drug remedy, why not discard it?

Zutoo will cure just as quickly and will save you the penalty, that it must sometime pay, who take the drugs which these cures contain.

If you will give Zutoo one trial, you will never take any other headache remedy again.

ALLAHABAD DISTRICT AND THE JUBILEE.

Bishop Frank W. Warne.

I have received a touching letter from Rev. Dennis Clancy, presiding elder of the Allahabad district, who has often been on the district, and was there a few months ago, through a very generous gift of the Jubilee Secretary, to represent the situation to the friends, that I send it on for the readers of the Michigan Christian Advocate, and any other connection except a hearty endorsement.

"Dear Bishop Warne:—Cholera is generally understood that Methodism in India had its beginning in Bareilly. The fact is that it really had its beginning at Allahabad. It was at Allahabad that Dr. Butler, by the noble generosity of the American Freedmen's Aid, succeeded in obtaining the first Hindustani preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church in India. Joel Janvier, that noble type of Christian manhood, began his Methodist ministry at Allahabad, and for years the only church faithfully for almost forty years. It was here that the Bible was first translated into the heavenly singing, and the first hymn book issued. The Master's service, was laid to rest in the beautiful little cemetery on the banks of the Jumna, almost in the shadow of the Allahabad fort. The presiding elder of the Allahabad district has been the only man to occupy the mission at his funeral, and also of laying charge of the work. What could be more fitting, in connection with the Jubilee, than that a Hindustani memorial church should be erected at Allahabad to the memory of this good man? The church could be known as "The Joel Janvier Memorial Hindustani church." Five thousand dollars would be enough to cover the whole project. The need for a Hindustani church is very great at present the Hindustani congregation, is rapidly increasing.

We have not yet had any of the mass movements that are characterizing a number of our fields, but the work has gone forward steadily, and we now have a Christian community, in the district, of well on to a thousand, and we have property worth nearly $25,000 of this amount less than $4,000 was received from the missionary society. The rest has been given by the W. F. M. S. During the past year there has been a decided deepening of the spiritual life among the people. The workers have become to India, in such a marked degree, has been felt all the more. The and its fruits are already appearing in the people's lives. The workers have pledged themselves to give a month's salary for the Jubilee. And the boys and girls of our school are trying to give one rupee each for it. At the time I could tell some touching stories of self-denial in connection with this. Suffice it to say that our girls are dry bread for days at the end of months that they might be able to give for the Jubilee Fund.

"Were I free to present fully the needs of the Allahabad district, I would call the attention of the friends at home to the appalling need of more workers for this large, needy and promising field. There should be a large and better schools. Until suitable property can be obtained for a girls' school in one of the schools will be seriously hampered in their work, as we are now boarding the girls in a hired property, and there is little room for either the growth of the school or the needs, together with suitable buildings, will cost about $5,000. In a few years there should have at Allahabad a Boarding school, like the one at Lucknow, but the time is not yet ripe for this.

"Allahabad, being the capital of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, and being in every way one of the most important cities of India, having large Government offices, and colleges as well as Hindoos, should be one of the strongholds of Methodism, as it is indeed bound to be. One can judge of the importance of the city of Allahabad holds in the estimation of the Hindoos by visiting it at the time it is held at the junction of the sacred rivers, Ganges and Jumna, every year when the middle of January to the middle of February, it is estimated that more than 2,000,000 people were present at the mela on one day during this year.

"When you pray, sometimes remember the Allahabad district and the throne of grace.

DENNIS CLANCY.

Allahabad, Feb. 15th, 1908.

A DANGER TO CHILDHOOD.

No mother would give her little one poison if she knew it, and yet all the so-called soothing syrups and many of the liquid medicines given children contain poisonous opiates, and an overdose will kill. When mother uses Baby's Own Tablets she has the guarantee of a government analyst that this medicine does not contain one particle of opiate or narcotic that it cannot possibly do harm. This assurance is worth much to the mother who cares for the safety of her little ones. Mrs. Chas. INTERESTING LETTER FROM MRS. OGDEN HINCH WHO WAS IN STRICKEN CITY DURING DISASTER.

Winnipeg Evening Telegram.

The following interesting letter has been received by the Misses Hinch, of this city, from their mother, Mrs. Ogden Hinch, who with Mr. Hinch was in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake, but succeeded in getting across to Oakland next day. The letter is dated Oakland, April 19th:

"No doubt you have heard of the terrible visitation that has come upon San Francisco, as we know that it has been telegraphed all over the world, and has been very anxious about us. Well, I wrote you the last time from the Palace at San Francisco. On the Tuesday we went around the town in a closed carriage, which we took at 10 o'clock, and returned to the Palace at three in the afternoon. Then for the rest of the day we were all over the city out to Golden Gate park and came friends to arrive at the Palace cafe. After dinner we went over to the Palace palm room to listen to the concert and watched the ladies in their magnificent costumes going to the grand opera. That was Tuesday night. Little we knew what was before us.

SCENE OF PANIC.

"At 5.20 Wednesday morning we were awakened by the Chinese boy bring Jap, who evidently knew the disin our breakfast through the door. The chief one was—we will never see our home again and what will they all do? But, thanks to our family Father, though the whole building rocked like a cradle and everything was flying around, and the plaster falling right on our bed, yet we escaped. After the first shock had passed we calmly got up and dressed ourselves and went downstairs, where we found every one in a panic. Women were in their night clothes, their hair hanging down, etc.; but the hotel was in ruins all over, in fact many of the finest buildings were damaged. With debris filling the street, many houses were down and people buried in them. Soon the wagonettes and autos and other automobiles were flying past with the dead and injured therein. It was a dreadful sight and everyone looking for another shock and fearing. There was nothing stable in the earth.

FIRE BREAKS OUT.

"To add to the horrors fire broke out in half a dozen places at once, and the flames soon were powerless. The water works had been injured by the earthquake, and it just was not to be had. By eight o'clock the Palace and the Grand, Where we were, were surrounded in danger and the police took possession and all the guests were ordered out; 1,500, just think of it. Well, we had to leave in the morning. We were given a dreadful sight and everyone looking for another shock and fearing. There was nothing stable in the earth.

"We walked, walked, walked, till we could walk no more and selected a place under an eave to sit down on the street a nice family were all on their steps. I asked them for a drink for Ogden, as he was feeling faint, so they invited us to go in to the front room and then told us we could go in the parlor, and papa lay down on a sofa, but I sat up all night. About four the lady had awakened me to say that I had to abandon the house. They just carried out a few things in sheets and locked up the house and left it to its fate. But before I left mamma I thought he would go back and try to get the trunk, as he could get there when he had nothing else to carry, but he found the place all surrounded and not allowed to go near. I had many things in there I did not want to lose, but that is not much, as we are left with our lives, when hundreds and thousands are dead and suffering. We had this morning to walk miles around to get to the ferry, leaving all our valises and fur coats. We got here at Oakland, and came to a home for a while, where the people are to sleep in the halls and parlors and thousands are fleeing from the doomed city. We will see it all in the papers. They can't exaggerate it at all. No more room here for us; it is awful, awful. We can't get any telegram through. We will leave here every morning early for Portland if we are living, as every body seems to be getting some other disaster. The city across the bay is burning away and will not be out for until it is all gone. It is three-quarters gone now."

Miss Ella Schoenmehorn, Kingsford, carriagemaker, but succeeded in getting across to Oakland next day. The letter is dated Oakland, April 19th:

"No doubt you have heard of the terrible visitation that has come upon San Francisco, as we know that it has been telegraphed all over the world, and has been very anxious about us. Well, I wrote you the last time from the Palace at San Francisco. On the Tuesday we went around the town in a closed carriage, which we took at 10 o'clock, and returned to the Palace at three in the afternoon. Then for the rest of the day we were all over the city out to Golden Gate park and came friends to arrive at the Palace cafe. After dinner we went over to the Palace palm room to listen to the concert and watched the ladies in their magnificent costumes going to the grand opera. That was Tuesday night. Little we knew what was before us.

SCENE OF PANIC.

"At 5.20 Wednesday morning we were awakened by the Chinese boy bring Jap, who evidently knew the disin our breakfast through the door. The chief one was—we will never see our home again and what will they all do? But, thanks to our family Father, though the whole building rocked like a cradle and everything was flying around, and the plaster falling right on our bed, yet we escaped. After the first shock had passed we calmly got up and dressed ourselves and went downstairs, where we found every one in a panic. Women were in their night clothes, their hair hanging down, etc.; but the hotel was in ruins all over, in fact many of the finest buildings were damaged. With debris filling the street, many houses were down and people buried in them. Soon the wagonettes and autos and other automobiles were flying past with the dead and injured therein. It was a dreadful sight and everyone looking for another shock and fearing. There was nothing stable in the earth.

FIRE BREAKS OUT.

"To add to the horrors fire broke out in half a dozen places at once, and the flames soon were powerless. The water works had been injured by the earthquake, and it just was not to be had. By eight o'clock the Palace and the Grand, Where we were, were surrounded in danger and the police took possession and all the guests were ordered out; 1,500, just think of it. Well, we had to leave in the morning. We were given a dreadful sight and everyone looking for another shock and fearing. There was nothing stable in the earth.

"We walked, walked, walked, till we could walk no more and selected a place under an eave to sit down on the street a nice family were all on their steps. I asked them for a drink for Ogden, as he was feeling faint, so they invited us to go in to the front room and then told us we could go in the parlor, and papa lay down on a sofa, but I sat up all night. About four the lady had awakened me to say that I had to abandon the house. They just carried out a few things in sheets and locked up the house and left it to its fate. But before I left mamma I thought he would go back and try to get the trunk, as he could get there when he had nothing else to carry, but he found the place all surrounded and not allowed to go near. I had many things in there I did not want to lose, but that is not much, as we are left with our lives, when hundreds and thousands are dead and suffering. We had this morning to walk miles around to get to the ferry, leaving all our valises and fur coats. We got here at Oakland, and came to a home for a while, where the people are to sleep in the halls and parlors and thousands are fleeing from the doomed city. We will see it all in the papers. They can't exaggerate it at all. No more room here for us; it is awful, awful. We can't get any telegram through. We will leave here every morning early for Portland if we are living, as everybody seems to be getting some other disaster. The city across the bay is burning away and will not be out for until it is all gone. It is three-quarters gone now."

Absolutely white flour makes the most beautiful white bread—the kind we all like.

But white bread is not necessarily pure because it is white. To be pure it must be made from purified flour.

There is only one method of making flour absolutely pure, and that is by electricity. No impurity can withstand the searching, purifying work of this electrical process.

The electrical method is employed by every big mill in the United States.

In Canada the only flour purified by electricity is therefore it is the only flour that can be considered as absolutely pure.

Royal Household Flour

A MAY WEDDING.

The marriage of Mr. Archie Gee, Clarview, and Miss Florence Ann Bullock of Sidney, took place in the early hour of six o'clock Wednesday morning, May 2d, at Christ's Church, Sidney. Miss Maggie Stinson, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and Mr. Jesse Gee, brother of the groom, did the duties of best man. The ceremony was performed by officiating clergyman, none but the contracting parties being present. The bride was handsomely attired in white silk, and wore a white chiffon hat trimmed with foliage. Her going-away gown was of light green mohair cloth. The bridesmaid was similarly attired. After the usual congratulations and best wishes, they were accompanied to the station, by a host of friends, and took the early train for Kingston, where they spent a few days visiting friends there. On their return, Friday morning, they proceeded to their future home at Mr. Robert Gee's, by a host of friends, about sixty in all, and a grand reception was held in honor of the young couple. Dancing began early in the evening and was kept up to four o'clock in the morning, when all departed for their respective homes, thanking the host and hostess for the evening of pleasure and wishing the happy young couple a prosperous voyage through life. A grand supper was also given, lasting from seven to one o'clock.

ANCIENT GOLD MINES.

There are records which show that as early as 3800 B.C., the Chaldeans were in possession of both Sinai and the spoil producing Land of Midian, Midian, where recent expeditions have discovered extremely ancient mineral workings, containing mining tools, dating back some 7,000 years. These mines, which yielded copper as well as gold, appear to have fallen into the hands of the first of the Pharaohs, for the very earliest Egyptian records yet discovered tell of the expulsion of foreign miners from the Sinaitic Peninsula.

Napanee's Greatest Store

OUR MEN'S STORE.

The Men's Furnishing and Clothing Service at Robinson's is of the standard of city stores. This store has a buying power utterly beyond the power of most stores. It isn't too much to say that as many people enter Robinson's in a day as go into any other store in Napanee in a week. This greater clientele justifies big buying that is decidedly helpful to us and to you. We are always open to buy large quantities of any line if we can get the price low enough. Two exceedingly good bargains have come our way and now we pass them on to you, as follows, commencing

THURSDAY, MAY 17th, AT 8 A.M.

SALE NO. 1.

44c for 75c Shirts.

Two hundred special Hair Cord Soft Front Negligee Shirts, in pretty patterns of white ground with black and blue figures and some with stripes. These shirts were made to sell at 75 cents each, and would be good value at that, but to make a rousing sale and clear them all out, we will sell them at 44c Each or 2 for 85c.

They will be on display in our east window on and after Tuesday, May 15th.

SALE NO. 2.

35c for Men's 50c Working Shirts.

About three hundred in this lot. They consist of Oxfords, Ginghams and Flannelettes, mostly good washable Ginghams of strong texture and suitable for summer wear. They are the kind that are sold in most stores at 50 cents each. To make a long story short we will sell them to our customers at 35c each or 3 for $1.

Better be on hand early Thursday, May 17th. They will be on display in one of our Men's Store windows on and after May 15th.

Men's Fine Colored Shirts

CRESCENT BRAND.

The Best Fitting Shirt In Canada.

Have you tried this make of Shirts. If you haven't we ask you to try one the next time you are in need of a shirt. If it does not please you and give you satisfaction we will refund the money to you. We have such an abundant range that we can please the most critical. The price range st arts at 50c and there is a splendid range even at this price to choose from, but at 75c and $1.00 you will fin d the biggest assortment. Then the still finer lines come at $1.25 and $1.50. All dollar Shirts and over are guaranteed to wash perfectly.

OUTING SHIRTS in beautiful patterns, also in cream openwork material, with reversible collar, a full range of sizes from 14 1-2 to 18, at 75c and $1.00.

Working Men's Shirts—Deacon Make.

Our sales have been so heavy in working Shirts that we have had to repeat again and again. We have just received a shipment of over 400 Shirts and now we can give you all sizes in the lines you like best. These Shirts are all reinforced over the shoulders, double stitched and in many other ways are designed and made specially to withstand the strain of hard work. They are larger by considerable than the average Working Shirt.

The Best Dollar Umbrellas--We Guarantee Them.

Umbrellas are risky to guarantee—so many people don't use them fairly. Lots of times of course the covering isn't the sort to give good wear. It depends on the store. But the Umbrellas we sell at one dollar and over are the best proposition you can find at the price; and this price we will guarantee to give satisfaction. Specials at 50c and 75c for boys' and and girls' use going to school.

Men's Cashmere Hose--"Victor" Brand.

We have won an enviable reputation in our Men's Hosiery Department. We have a great many lines at different prices all the way from the three for a quarter kind up, but the line we are more proud of than any of the rest is our VICTOR BRAND CASHMERE SOX, THREE PAIRS FOR ONE DOLLAR. This Sock is made by the same people in Scotland who make our celebrated "Fing-Pong" boys' stocking, and it certainly is a cracker-jack. Compare it with any other hose sold at 50c a pair and then think of our price 39c a pair or three pairs for one dollar. Sizes, 9 1-2, 10, 10 1-2, 11. In tans and black.

Correct Clothing for Men and Youths.

The present fashion for men calls for draped clothing, rather than tight fitting. And strange as this may seem, it takes higher skill to make draped clothes look well than it does to work the garment to your curves.

"Sovereign" Brand Clothing is cut by the best designers in America and manufactured by tailors who are artists in their line. That is what makes Robinson Co. Clothing better than most of the custom made. We're winning friends and we're holding them—so this year's clothing business comes from all last year's friends, plus this year's new comers. Men who sneered at ready-made clothing have come to like and wear what we furnish.

Men's and Youths' Suits in a hundred and more patterns at from 4.00 up to 15.00.
Men's and Youths' Raincoats and Top Coats at from 7.50 to 12.50.
Men's Fancy Vests in beautiful designs, 1.00 to 3.00.
Men's Separate Trousers, made to fit, 1.00 to 3.50.

Get the Boy's New Suit from these Up-to-date Stocks.

BUSTER BROWN and NORFOLK SUITS, RUSSIAN SUITS, WASH SUITS, TOP COATS, KNICKERS, also SINGLE AND DOUBLE BREASTED THREE PIECE SUITS. Prices range from 1.50 and up to 7.50, and equally wide choosing as to fabric and effect. We've made sure that there's superlative excellence at each price. As a rule, see if it isn't so that grade for grade, the prices of other good stores are a notch higher than Robinson's. You won't know how pretty these little Russian and Buster Brown Suits are until you come and see them.

—Last week the Harvey Warner park was fixed up for spring. A number of shade and ornamental trees and an evergreen hedge at the back were set out; also flower beds. We regret to state that on Friday night some youngsters did a lot of damage to the newly set out trees and shrubs, thoroughly wantonly breaking off the tops. Only children, we feel sure, would be guilty of such conduct, and we trust parents will instruct their children to guard and protect public property in future. The citizens should constitute themselves guardians of this beautiful little park, and watch it jealously. The shade trees set out along the boulevard were presented by Mr. H. B. Sherwood.

The following letter was received by David Kirk from his brother in San Francisco:

Dear Brother and Sister,—I write you a few lines to let you know I am well, although on the morning of the 17th of April, when I was awakened by the terrible earthquake, I was in the fourth floor of a very high frame building, and was thrown out of my bed onto the floor, and the plaster of the walls almost covered me up. I tried to get on my feet but could not do so. I was near a building after building crashing to the ground, and could not stand up, though it was impossible to stand one second longer. The shock only lasted about two minutes, although it seemed like hours to me. By this time the shock was over, and I proceeded to dress myself. I was in a terrible state so. I did not take time to lace my boots until I got out on the street. When I came to open my bed room door I found it was wrenched so that I could not open. By this time I heard the fire alarm, and knew that the house was on fire. My only show was to burst open the door. I tugged and tugged against it, but could not burst it. Then, I got a chair, the big heavy kind, and succeeded in opening it at last, and ran down the stairs. When I got to the bottom I was almost suffocated on with smoke. The fire department was there, but they could not do anything but stand and look at it burn, for the watermains were broken and they hadn't a drop of water. I could see fires in all directions. They put the fire under military rule at once, and if a soldier told you to do anything you would have to do it or they would shoot you. I witnessed one shooting case. It was a grocery man selling flour at $7.50 per hundred. A soldier stepped into his store and asked what flour he charged, and he shot him to the ground. There were hundreds of cases similar to this.

It is estimated that ten thousand acres were swept by the conflagration of the flames. All the business part of the city is a mass of ruins. I call myself lucky that I escaped. Thousands lost their property and are now homeless and penniless. I cannot begin to explain the suffering of this terrible disaster. I lost over three hundred dollars' worth of goods and $75 in money. But I do not care for the money, my life is worth millions to me. I was two days and one night getting out of the city. I am now at Bohee's Mills now, where I intend to work the summer, but do not care to hear from you having as narrow an escape of you having as narrow an escape of you having as narrow an escape as I have had, although as it was to me, I would not have missed the experience for any thing. It is some thing a person cannot realize unless they have been through it themselves.

IT IS DANGEROUS TO NEGLECT A COLD.

Slow often do we hear it remarked: "It's only a cold," and a few days later learn that the man is on his back with pneumonia. This is of such common occurrence that a cold, however slight, should not be disregarded. It always cures, and is pleasant to take. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 18d

EARTHQUAKE AND FIRE

LORD WAS NOT IN EITHER, BUT IN THE STILL SMALL VOICE.

SAN FRANCISCO'S LESSONS

"Judge Not, That Ye Be Not Judged," When Tempted to Ascribe the Disaster to Punishment For Sin—World's Great Loving Heart—Individual Regeneration, Consequent Upon the Promptings of the Still Small Voice, Means Better City Will Arise.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 4.—In the terrible calamity which has befallen San Francisco the preacher to-day finds a lesson for the whole nation. The text is I. Kings xix. 11, 12, "An earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice."

"Extra! Extra! Extra!" cried the newsboy in the street. Like the fish-monger's call, the voice echoed up and leaped through my study window. It did not cause even the tremor of the hand that held the moving pen. Why, I have heard that call of "Extra! Extra!" so often that it was like the cry of "Wolf! Wolf!" in the legend of old. I did not even have interest enough to say, "Another railway accident," or "Another eruption of Mount Vesuvius," or "Another threatened war between France and Germany over the Africa troubles." But suddenly my self-complacency was roused to vehement action. A member of the family rushed into the room and said: "Have you heard the news? San Francisco is destroyed by an earthquake. The Palace Hotel and the Call Building and the great City Hall are in complete ruins. All the great hotels are gone. All the places of amusement are in flames. A thousand people are dead. The city has taken fire, and the water mains are burst." "God help them! God help them!" was my answer. "But very probably, like all first rumors, there is exaggeration in the reports. Great cities do not burn like wooden buildings, could never have its foundations ruined. Let me find out from headquarters." So I called to the telephone and called for a friend at one of the prominent city newspaper offices and asked, "Are reports as bad as the first telegrams intimate?" "Much worse, much worse," was the answer. "The city is in flames, and we fear it will be completely destroyed. The city is said to have sunk. The earth's crust quake did not upheave we fear that the holocaust will obliterate. That is the reason why reports from the communication is broken now. The wires are all down."

Oh, the horror of it! The city of Los Angeles lay stunned. Two-thirds of all our population had friends or relatives or business interests in the city of San Francisco. The bleeding, moaning, helpless cry of America's metropolis of the Pacific was everywhere answered by a deeper sob of anguish than that with which arose the City of the Angels. We were one—one in family love, one in business interests. We seemed to be more than neighbors. San Francisco's sufferings were Los Angeles' sufferings. We are next door neighbors in the family of cities.

Then the long wait. No news—wires down; communication stopped. Ah, Los Angeles knew then what must have been the feelings of the fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters when the telegraph sprites thrilled and the news flashed over the northern and the southern states that the battle of Fredericksburg was being fought. Oh, the anxious moment of waiting for the dead list! They say it is hard to go to the front and die. I do not think it is nearly so hard as to stay home and live and think that your dear ones are soon to be numbered among the dead. They say that all of 15,000 men were killed at Fredericksburg. The rumors at first declared that 10,000 people were in San Francisco. "What will my telephone bell ever stop ringing?" "My husband is in the Palace Hotel," says one. "My mother and sisters are living there," says another. "I have two brothers there," says another. "My son is there," says another. Aye, they could say it, but what could I say? Nothing. The wires were down. There seemed to be no hope. Then the telegraph instrument began to click. The streets about the different bulletin boards were filled. "News, news! Give us the news!" was the cry. But when the news began to come in, instead of a smile upon the lip, that blanched cheek became paler, if that were possible.

Then, as the crowds grow thicker and denser, we find men fighting their way out. "What is the matter with you?" we ask. "Let me out!" they cry. "Let me out! I want to get the train and start north at once. I must get into that doomed city and go to my dear one." Crowds are now blockading the railroad offices for hours, but although a thousand cars were to start, it would not be a long enough train to accommodate the people rushing to go to San Francisco to rescue their friends. Then the reports come in awfully contradictory similarity. "Flames spreading. Buildings being dynamited to stop onward progress of conflagration. Gen. Funston forbids any one to land in the city. Water famine threatening. All wholesale houses destroyed. Hunger and famine staring the people in the face. People dying in the streets from exhaustion and starvation. Napa Insane Asylum destroyed. Stanford University buildings down. San Jose a wreck." Then, as a wailing cry from the telegrams from Oakland, from the mayor and the governor: "Help! Help! Send us help! San Francisco is starving! Help! Help!"

Then the reviving wheels of the railroad trains come rumbling into our depots and the passengers alight. Oakland are the first refugees from the city of death. "Were the stories overdrawn?" we ask. "No, no!" they answer. "Not a story has been overdrawn." "We were asleep." Suddenly, in the morning, we were flung from the bed. The earth felt like a mighty terrier that had gripped by the neck, shaking the life out of it, and then dropped for dead. Then the streets were filled with men and women and children in their night robes. Some were praying, some shrieking, some muttering like madmen. The sky was red with the glare of the burning fires. At one time the flames leaped out of every window of the Palace Hotel. The top stories of the different buildings in many instances seemed to catch fire first. Then men and women started to run for the ferry boats, as if it were a struggle to save property, but a mad race for life."

Oh, why should we go on and describe this horror In all the history of the world there never was a more ghastly picture. The battlefields of Gettysburg and Waterloo were tragedies of men only and had not the pathos of dying women and children, as had this pandemonium of furies. And yet, amid the heavy, reeking earth, amid the blasing, leaping flames, amid the lurid skies and the starving and the dead, there is a world has a thrilling and some grand lesson for practical use for everyday life.

Let us beware, in the first place, lest we attempt to "judge" the providence of God's wrath. Let us halt before we pass judgment upon the past sins of San Francisco, lest we begin to fortify ourselves against the calamities in the event of a similar visitation. Let us remember that "judge not that ye be not judged." But in spite of this divine command to "judge not" there are people who are ready to affirm that the reason why this tragedy was permitted to overtake the metropolis of the Pacific coast because San Francisco was a city fostering and reeking with sin. Why, no sooner was this awful tragedy known than answers by wires than one of the prominent newspapers of Illinois sent to me and asked whether I believed that San Francisco was destroyed, like Sodom and Gomorrah, on account of its sins. I replied then as I reply now: "Any man who would make a statement that he thought San Francisco was destroyed on account of its sins is unfit to be a religious teacher and unfit to be quoted in any intelligent circle." So the ancient prophet found, as he shuddered at the earthquake in his day. Jesus said in the earthquake. And after the eathquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire. And after the fire a still small voice. Oh, to hear the voice of the Lord.

Do you think John Milton became blind on account of his sins? Do you think Abraham Lincoln and James A. Garfield and William McKinley were assassinated on account of their sins? Were those missionaries who were tortured and killed in the Boxer uprising of China some years ago murdered on account of their sins? Then, if they were, you might have a right to say that this tragedy came to San Francisco on account of its sins; but, if not, you have not the slightest reason for affirming that the earthquake came as a judgment of God.

Has any one a right to say that San Francisco was destroyed on account of its sins? Is he listening aright to the words of Christ? What did Jesus say when his disciples pointed to a man who was born blind? He replied, He said, "Master, did this man become blind on account of his sins or on account of his parents?" Did Jesus not answer as to say: "All blindness and physical ailments are directly due to some particular sin or sinful deeds, either of man or his parents?" Christ answered, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." Then in another place Christ told how the tower of Siloam fell, or fell so quickly and unexpectedly as the campanile of St. Mark's in Venice. Then he said: "Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans because they suffered such things? I tell thee nay, but except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Thus to-day, in lieu of the words of Christ, we propose to say, "This catastrophe was sent upon San Francisco on account of its sins." I put my finger in my mouth, and say: "Stop, brother! Stop, sister! Silence! Judge not that ye be not judged. Let God's judgments alone, for they will, but leave to him the right of judgment. Let us first see that our own city is free from sin before we talk so much about other cities' sins." Wouldst thou try to pluck the mote out of thy brother's eye when there is not the beam which is sticking forth out of thine own eye?

This catastrophe also teaches us that the gospel of Jesus Christ is a matter of faith and not necessarily of creed interpretation. We now see through a glass darkly. We now know only in part, and the moment we attempt to unite with Paul and say, "Great is the mystery of godliness," and then with the next breath say, "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief," the better it will be for our spiritual life and for the spiritual lives of those about us. You cannot understand often why God does as he does. We will have to leave all the explanations for heaven. Earth can never solve them.

But there is still another lesson. This tragedy, as no other calamity for the past century, has proved how much the American people are akin and how much they are willing to help one another. "God hath made of one blood all nations to dwell upon the face of the earth." But, though we may all be of one blood, yet no one can deny that we all think we can each other better so appropriately as when the right hand of trouble is laid upon a brother's heart.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

Can we not find in geological affinities of the world the symbol of this love of man for his fellow man, clinging to each other in times of trouble? If you study eruptions and volcanic disturbances, almost without exception you will find that earthquakes in one part of the world nearly always mean earthquakes in another part of the world—Mount Vesuvius in eruption and Charleston earthquake dealing their blows of death about the same time; Mont Pelee and Mauna Los seeming to be subterranean connection with each other; Lisbon, in 1755, with its 50,000 dead; Koschan, North Persia, with its 40,000 dead. What are the causes of these simultaneous geographical disturbances we know not; but, just as when Europe trembles America seems to tremble, so we find through all the great world when one part of the human race is suffering other parts of the human race suffer also.

I know many people may not agree with me. They affirm that this is a mean and contemptible world and that human heart is not in sympathy with human heart, but the actions of the American people toward suffering San Francisco give that statement the lie. No sooner did the Japanese and the other cities bear what had happened to their sister, San Francisco, than the money began to flow in streams. Doctors and nurses volunteered their services for help. Schools were closed to send the children into the clothing and food to be expressed to San Francisco at once. Churches were turned into relieving stations for goods. The railroads said, "We will carry the refugees free." The express companies said, "We will carry the household stuffs free. The great dry goods stores said, "You can come and buy your goods at cost price." And what Los Angeles was doing Boston and New York and Philadelphia and Pittsburg and Minneapolis and Denver and New Orleans and all the other American cities are doing. Oh, it is a glorious sight to see men and women giving of their substance to their fellow men merely because they are in trouble. Do not talk to me about this being a mean world. We as individuals may be mean, but the great world has a heart that is ever helping hands that are now reaching forth to agonizing San Francisco prove it.

But I learn from the awful catastrophe another lesson. It is this: Men and women seem to be blind to the ever present signs of danger. Because the earthquake has not come like the lightnings, have struck right and left and hit everywhere, except at their own hearthstone, they seem to deceive themselves are impervious to dangers, and will never be smitten down. They think, because they live on the Pacific coast, an earthquake will never jolt them into ruins, as Pompeii and Herculaneum were destroyed. They think that because they live on Long Island, they can never be submerged as was Galveston, Texas. They think because they live in St. Louis, a cyclone can never destroy them, as Louisville, Ky., and Gainesville, Ga., have been. Oh, yes, they can think of earthquakes and cyclones and tidal waves 2,000 miles or even 3,000 miles away from home. They may even picture one in Charleston, but not one at their own doorstep. Like a flash out of a clear sky came the destruction of the city of San Francisco at the Golden Gate. Like a flash death may come stalking along, and come pounding at your door and mine. It came and toppled over the massive walls of the metropolis of the Pacific coast a few days ago.

Now, amid all these scenes of destruction and sorrow that have come to our forefather sister city, I send to these suffering people words of congratulation and good cheer. First, I say, Thank God, that the earthquake had to come, that it came in the early hours of the morning." You know that San Francisco is situated at the Golden Gate of the Pacific. It was truly the Golden Gate then. The sun was just arising over the eastern hills and throwing its light upon the shimmering waters of the bay. Had this earthquake come hours later Oakland and Berkeley and San Rafael and scores of other suburban cities and towns would have emptied their thousands and tens of thousands of business men and shopkeepers into the great metropolis. Then the huge ferry buildings would have been crowded. Then, when the walls cracked and fell, it would have meant the loss of hundreds of lives, but of thousands upon thousands. Thank God, I say, that the earthquake came at 5.30 a. m. instead of 10.30 a.m. God be praised, we say. San Francisco's sad loss be toppled, but San Francisco's fathers and mothers and children live. Even the blackest clouds may have the brightest of silver linings.

Second fact for congratulation: Although the city of San Francisco has fallen, yet the city of San Francisco shall rise again. The future San Francisco which shall arise will be as much ahead of the old city as the modern locomotive is ahead of the old prairie schooner or canal boat. Like Galveston, its streets will be broader and built with nobler buildings. Its palaces will be richer, its stores filled with better goods. Its people will have better homes. It is all nonsense to talk about this being the end of San Francisco. You can no more blot out San Francisco than you can blot out New York or London. New York does not belong to the State of New York. It belongs to the United States. It is the port of entry. San Francisco does not belong to California. It belongs to the whole United States. Most of the goods sent to or received from Asia must pass through its "gates of gold." Then, as the country grows to the west, San Francisco must continue to grow. This one setback can no more retard its onward progress than St. Louis' bright heaven of hope can be eclipsed by the dark clouds of one fatal cyclone.

Then, lastly, I congratulate San Francisco because this great sorrow is going to result in a great revival of faith, the cleansing from sin and the consecration of its people to the service of the Divine Master. The city of San Francisco has been filled with eastern people. Most of these have come from Christian homes. But after many of them left the old homesteads they drifted away from the old spiritual moorings. They did as so many eastern people who go to southern California have done. They put their church letters in their trunks and never took them out. They spent their week days in making money and their Sundays in sport and fun seeking. In other words, they have not been children of God, as their forefathers were children of God. But now, by the broken fortunes and the wrecks made graphic these people of the northern part of the state will surrender their hearts to Jesus Christ. They will renew their pledges to the Saviour. (And thus with the right hand of fellowship to the east and with the left hand they will reach out to the far west, and in each of those states so many will have a like sacred book in which are recorded the promises of God, upon whom they will throw themselves in Christian trust and adoration. Ah, the sufferings have been great, but out of those sufferings Christ shall lead his chosen ones, as he led the children of Israel of old.

May we to-day pray for our bereft brothers and sisters of this stricken city. May we continue to reach out to them the helping hand of brotherly love. And in the midst of their misery and desolation may we with them consecrate our homes, our possessions, our lives to God, and our own hearts to the Master's service.

BLOODLESS GIRLS.

Can Obtain New Health Through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Anaemia means bloodlessness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new, rich, red blood and thus cure anaemia. When the blood is poor the nerves are starved and irritable. Then comes hysteria, neuralgia, sleeplessness and other nerve disorders. Headaches, backaches and sideaches wear out and dreams the good pale victim. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills soon bring ruddy health and rosy vigor. They enrich the jangled nerves and give new strength to every organ. Miss Winnie Allen, Montreal, says: "I was so weak and run down that my friends thought I was going into consumption. I was as pale as a corpse, had no appetite and did not sleep well. The least exertion tired me out, and if I walked a few blocks it would be almost breathless. My sister advised me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after using them for a few weeks I am again enjoying good health, and have good color in my cheeks. I think every girl should take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure any case of bloodlessness just as surely as they cured Miss Allen. Any pale anaemic needs only one thing—new blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make new, rich blood with every dose. WISE AND OTHERWISE.

With the exception of the Smith's, Jones, and Johnsons, there are few families as old as the Hills.

For the Overworked.—What are the causes of despondency and melancholy? A disordered liver is one cause and a prime one. A disordered liver means a disordered stomach, and a disordered stomach means disturbance of the nervous system. This brings the whole body into subjection and the victim feels sick all over. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a recognized remedy in this state and relief will follow their use.

"Here!" roared the old lawyer to his son, studying law with him, "you told me you had read this book on Evidence, and yet the leaves are not cut." "Used X-rays," yawned the versatile son; and the father chuckled with delight as he thought what a lawyer the boy would make.

Something More Than a Purgative.—To purge is the only effect of many pills now on the market. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are more than a purgative, they strengthen the stomach, where other pills weaken it. They cleanse the blood by purifying the liver and kidneys, and they stimulate where other pill compounds depress. Nothing of an injurious nature, used for merely purgative powers, enters into their composition.

She may be young, she may be old,
She may be warm, she may be cold,
She may be thin, she may be fat,
But, anyhow, she'll have a hat.

"Do you think you can live as cheaply as one?"

"Before my marriage I thought they could."

"And afterward?"

"Afterward I found they had to."

"Tis Well to Know a Good Thing," said Mrs. Surface to Mrs. Knowell, when they met in the street. "Why, where have you been for a week?" "Down back." "Oh, just down to the store for a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil," said Mrs. Surface, who hates puns, walked on. But she remembered, and when she contracted a cold on her back there was another customer for Eclectric Oil.

"Yes, madam," said the doctor, "your husband needs a rest."

"I know, doctor," replied Mrs. Nagget, "but he won't listen to me."

"Don't compel him to listen to you. That's the sort of rest he needs most."

Use the safe, pleasant and effectual worm killer, Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator; nothing equals it. Procure a bottle and take it home.

Maud—I don't know how to get rid of that lieutenant for Sunday. He insists upon calling every Sunday evening.

Mabel—Have you tried eating onions with your Sunday dinner?

Maud—Yes. And every time I have eaten them he has had a cold in his head.

Have you tried Holloway's Corn Cure? It has no equal for removing these troublesome corns. Thousands of many have testified who have tried it.

Mrs. Wise—Tom, I've written mother. Here's the letter I read to you.

Mr. Wise—You've dated it the twenties, and this is only the early part of the nineteenth.

Mrs. Wise—Yes, I know; but I'm going to give it to you to punctuate.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea, and have to use every precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking, or green fruit, is sure to bring on the attack. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer troubles. If a few drops are taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

"How is your little boy who swallowed the needle?"

"There's no change in him."

Griggs—No, I hardly ever speculate. I did buy a little thing last week on margin, however, when it stood at 90, and now it's down to 40.

Briggs—Too bad, old man! What stock was it?

Griggs—I didn't say 'twas stock. 'Twas a thermometer.

Teacher—Now, Bobby, where is St. Paul?

Bobby—In heaven, I t'ink.

Teacher—How many commandments are there, Sally?

Sally—Please, teacher, ten.

Teacher—I suppose you were to break a commandment. (Impressive silence.) Sally—Then there'd be nine.

Wife—Before we were married you used to write me letters eight and ten pages long. Now, when you go away, you just send me little notes of half a page.

Husband—Um—my dear, I am—er—trying to economize on letter paper, so as to save more money for my little duckie darling to spend.

Jenks—Do you keep a scrap book? Housedyer—Oh, yes; we have one at home. My wife has an account book for household expenses, and we scrap over that constantly.

Miserable Deception

PRACTISED BY

Certain Makers of Adulterated and Worthless Package Dyes.

Notwithstanding the unanimous verdict of the leading chemists, experts and chemists, that it is impossible to color animal (wool and silk) fibres, and vegetable (cotton and linen) fibres with the same dye, we find speculators in the jealous of the enormous success of the DIAMOND DYES, putting up, and offering for sale worthless package dyes which they represent to color any material with one dye. This cruel deception has caused serious suffering for many a home in Canada.

The DIAMOND DYES, the world's great dyes, give to the ladies perfect dyes for wool and silk, and special dyes for cotton and linen, and all mixed goods, guaranteeing perfect color results.

The ladies will insure and protect themselves if they avoid all merchants who sell the crude and worthless package dyes recently put on the market. In every case ask for the DIAMOND DYES, and see that each package bears the words "DIAMOND DYES." Please send your name and address to Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, Montreal, P.Q., and you will receive Free of cost our Instruction Book for Home Dyeing, or Card of Dyed Samples and story in verse entitled, "The Longjohns' Trip to the Klondike."

Uriah Wilson

ON THE SALARY GRAB.

Montreal Star, 3d May, 1906.

MR. WILSON SUPPORTS BILL.

Mr. Uriah Wilson, of Lennox and Addington, has also his bills before the House, to abolish the pensions to ex-Ministers and to reduce the indemnity to members to the old figure of $1,500, was the next speaker. At the outset he expressed regret that the Government had not consented to consider the three bills before the House at once. He felt certain that if his bill proposing to abolish the pensions was voted on the pensions would go. He reminded Sir Wilfrid Laurier that he (Laurier) took the opinion in the House a few seasons ago that the whole pension system should be overhauled. It would appear that the Premier, as he was getting older, was becoming more conservative.

Mr. Wilson next quoted from a speech delivered by Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, during the North York by-election in which the Postmaster-General stated that there was no more reason why ex-Ministers and Judges should be entitled to superannuation more than merchants and farmers. The working people, Mr. Aylesworth declared on that occasion, should not be taxed to provide pensions for men who had received good salaries from the country.

"Those are my sentiments exactly," declared Mr. Wilson.

Proceeding, he declared that the Pension and Indemnity Act was unfortunate and immoral. It was unfortunate that they were not introduced earlier in the session. A notice of these bills should have been placed on the order paper at least a week or ten days before the close of the session. This would have given an opportunity for a discussion of the matter in the newspapers. The Premier must be willing to put through during his own absence from the House, and he therefore took this opportunity of expressing his disapproval of them. It was unfortunate to argue that the bills had not been criticized in the press.

ACTIVE CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE GRAB.

A Leading Paper Was Publishing Statements From Electors From Many Parts of Canada, and It Was Noticeable That Practically No One Endorsed the Raise in Members' Salaries and very Few Approved of the Increased Indemnity to Members.

Mr. Wilson next referred to a meeting held in his constituency largely attended by farmers at which resolutions were passed practically approving of the increase in the salary of the Premier and of the salary for the leader of the Opposition, but condemning all other features of the legislation passed last session. Mr. Wilson endorsed the terms of this resolution. The Premier could be well paid. The leader of the Opposition does as much work, and probably more, than a member of the Cabinet. It was better that he should be paid by the people than by subscription or otherwise. He had a guarantee that when the day came for him to assume the reins of power that he would not be under any obligation to help men who had added him in his days of need. Mr. Wilson then spoke on the bills proposal to increase the indemnity had been discussed. He had stated

SCHEMERHORN—KIMMETT.

On Wednesday evening, May 8th, a very pretty event occurred at the Robbin parsonage, when the Rev. C. W. DeMille joined in the holy bonds of wedlock Miss Jennie Kimmett, of Marlbank, to Mr. John Schemerhorn, of Richmond. After the ceremony was performed the bridal party drove to the home of the bride's parents where a bountiful wedding supper awaited them. The bride was beautifully attired in a white silk blouse and blue skirt. The bridesmaid, Miss Ada Schemerhorn, was dressed similar to the bride. The groom was ably supported by the bride's brother, Mr. T. Kimmett. The happy couple left the following day amid rice and good wishes for Belleville, where they will spend their honeymoon. Congratulations.

ROBINSON LOYNES.

Died at his residence, "The Island," Adolphustown, Sunday, May 6th, Robinson Loynes, in his eighty-eighth year. Deceased was born in Norfolk, England, but came to this country when a young man, residing first at Kingston and later at Cape Vincent, N.Y. His wife passed away forty years ago, and since then he has been living with his daughter at Adolphustown. Another daughter, Mrs. J. A. Putman, Cape Vincent, and four sons, Richard, Long Beach, Cal.; Robinson, of Denver, Col., Charles, of Bay City, Michigan, and Shore, of Napanee, mourn his loss. The remains were laid at rest beside those of his wife at Cape Vincent.

HOUSE OF REFUGE NEEDED.

The following communication from a well known resident of Napanee certainly shows need of a House of Refuge in this section, and we venture to say that there are several other cases of a like nature if all were known:—"If the friends who think there is no necessity for a home for old people would visit some of the places in where the unfortunate live, they would act. One case, John Wickum, lives all alone since his wife died, and for days was in bed with no person to care for him. A neighbor went in to see him and found he could not help himself. He asked her to break up some bread and leave it by his bed so he could reach it as he could not help himself."

SILLS—FUNNELL.

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday evening, May 9th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Sills, Richmond, when their daughter, Carrie Grace, became the bride of Mr. W. J. Funnell, of Oshawa, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Funnell, of Morven. The bride, who was given away by her father, was gowned in white and wore the Brodeos veil of tulle and orange blossoms. She was assisted by Mrs. Clarke, of Napanee, as matron of honor, the flower girls being little Miss Davis and Miss Sills, who looked perfectly sweet. Mr. Garfield Sills, brother of the bride, supported the groom. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. R. Real, of Napanee. The spacious rooms of Mr. Sills' home were beautifully decorated with evergreens, flags, bunting and flowers, and the ninety guests present all seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion. After the ceremony an elaborate supper was served, one interesting feature being that all the delicious cakes were made by the bride. The popularity of the bride was evidenced by the numerous, useful and costly presents, the groom's present being a beautiful gold watch and chain. Among the presents most appreciated was one from Rev. Mr. Wickett, Mr. Funnell's former pastor. Among the guests from town we noticed Mrs. and Rev. J. R. Real, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Bogart, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Madole, Dr. and Mrs. Vrooman, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Paul, Mrs. Challice, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Gibbard, Dr. and Mrs. Wagar, Mr. and Mrs. Canfield Shorey, Mr. and Mrs. Irvine Parks. The happy couple took the midnight train for Toronto and other western points, and will make their future home at Oshawa with their many other friends we wish them bon voyage.

NOT IF AS RICH AS ROCKEFELLER

If you had all the wealth of Rockefeller, the Standard Oil magnate, you could not buy a better medicine for bowel complaints than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. The most eminent physician can not prescribe a better preparation for colic and diarrhoea, both for children and adults. The uniform success of this remedy has shown it to be superior to all others. It never fails, and when reduced with water and sweetened, is pleasant to take. Every family should be supplied with it. Sold at The Red Cross Drug Store. 15c

A WEALTHY TRAMP.

A Chief Graham arrested yesterday morning a one-legged man for begging. He gave his name as Peter McQuaig, of Parry Sound, and said he was a lumberman and river driver before losing his left leg, which was amputated above the knee. When searched $750.80 was found on him, which the Chief deposited in the Dominion Bank. McQuaig made vigorous resistance to arrest, and scratched the chief's hand badly.

LUCEY—PARNELL.

Another marriage was solemnized by the Rev. I. W. Jones, of Tamworth, who perhaps has married more couples, considering the time he has resided in the county, than any other person. This time the wedding happened in the stirring village of Enterprise, on Wednesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, in St. John's church. The contracting parties were Mr. John H. Lucey, of Watertown, N.Y., and Miss Margaret K. Parnell, of Newburgh, Ont. Only the very immediate friends of the bride were present, who was very prettily gowned in white, and carried a beautiful bouquet of white roses, and was attended by little Elizabeth Mary Mellow. After the ceremony the party proceeded to the home of Mrs. S. H. Merrill, a sister of the bride, where a delicious breakfast was served and the accustomed toasts honored. The happy pair proceeded to Napanee and points east for a short tour, and after a short return to Enterprise, purpose to reside in Watertown, N.Y.,

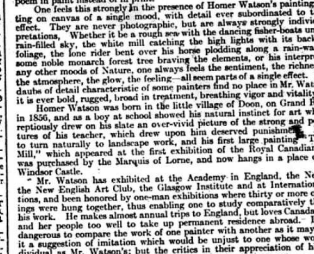
HOMER WATSON

Canada's Great Landscape Painter.

Every great landscape artist is both a poet and a painter. The imagination, the intuition, the interpretation, the sympathy, the reverence, the love, kinship and communion with Nature of the poet, filtering through the mind of the artist find their medium of expression in brush and colors. Every great painting is a poem in paint instead of in print.

One feels this strongly in the presence of Homer Watson's paintings, the putting on canvas of a single mood, with detail so subordinated to the general effect. They are never photographic, but are always strongly individual interpretations. Whether it be a rough sea with the dancing fisher-boats under a dull, pretatious, Whether it be a rough sea with the dancing fisher-boats under a dull, red sky, the white mill catching the light while its background of rain-filled sky, the white mill catching the light while its background of foliage, the deep elder bent over his horse plodding along a rain-washed road, some noble monarch forest tree braving the elements, or his interpretations of some one-half to fifty acres of land. Usual terms for cash, and for farm made known at time of sale.



D. W. ALLISON.

For two years Mr. Allison, a prominent citizen of the Township of Adolphustown, and widely known and highly esteemed throughout the county, has been ill, has been gradually sinking, and on Tuesday afternoon the end came. Deceased had attained the patriarchal age of eighty-five years, but there is little doubt his death was prematurely hastened through an accident which occurred over a year ago, when he was knocked down by a runaway horse, and so badly shaken up and injured, that from that time on his decline was marked.

The late D. W. Allison was a son of the late Joseph Allison, of the Loyalist stock, and was of that hardy family. The remaining brothers are Cyrus Allison, Farm Inspector, Athens, and Alexander, town. John and Henry died some few years ago. The sister is Mrs. Wm. Gunsolus, Adolphustown; Mrs. W. Hudson, Kingston, and Mrs. Maiford, Adolphustown.

Deceased has a widow one daughter and three sons surviving. They are, Mrs. Bruce Allison, Dr. David Allison, in the United States; John B. Allison, collector of customs, Napanee, and Raymond Allison, at home. Deceased was a Methodist in religious faith. The funeral service was held in the M. E. Methodist church on Thursday afternoon, and was attended by a large concourse of friends, a distance to pay a last tribute of respect to the deceased. Rev. Mr. Boyce conducted the services, and the remains were laid to rest in the Adolphustown cemetery.

Some time after leaving school the late Mr. Allison took up agricultural pursuits, and how successful he's certainly were is best manifested by the fact at the position which he held in the township. Although not a man of liberal business tact he amassed a fortune which he enjoyed by advancing the prosperity of the community in various ways. He was a public spirited man, which prompted to be of public advantage, and for the general advancement of society. He was extensively engaged in the manufacture of lumber, and all the mercantile trade, which enterprises Mr. Allison engaged in largely upon an extensive scale, and for many years ago the largest land owner in the Township of Adolphustown.

Mr. Allison was a consistent reformer and held public office, although brief, with honor. He was elected municipally in the important work of consolidating the county debt, in 1883 he was returned to represent the constituency of Lennox in the parliament of Canada, and made a good representative. Socially he was held in high esteem, being a member of the Masonic craft, having received the highest degrees obtainable in the order.

In 1876 he married Amelia Hinchcliffe, daughter of one of the oldest families in the township. He erected, on the shores of the Bay of Quinte, in a most picturesque spot, a palatial residence, planned and equipped with every modern convenience. Here his hospitality was unbounded, and his home the centre of social life in the community. Mr. Allison was a member of the Methodist church and one of its liberal supporters. Years ago he erected on the hill, which overlooks the mausoleum of solid cut stone, which is nearly as indestructible as either lime or the granite. As it is possible to make and there the remains of himself and family will be placed when their career here is ended.

ELECTRIC STORM.

A severe electrical storm passed over Napanee last Saturday evening, commencing about 5.30 o'clock. It was preceded all that time by quite a violent hailstorm which rattled the windows in an alarming fashion. Lightning struck the flag staff on the Bridge mill, and shattered it. Mr. Irvine VanAlstine's home, South Napanee, was also struck and the roof set on fire, but the blaze was speedily extinguished by the timely use of telephones about town were also burned out.

The flag staff on the Bridge mill is the second time it has been struck by lightning, and the first time since the present mill was erected. The south-west corner of the brisco was struck, but there are no external marks on the building. The lightning struck the flag staff, and damaged the plaster on the wall being knocked off. There was no one in the room at the time.

ELSEWHERE.

Mr. R. G. Miller's barn at Milhaven was struck during the storm, where the bolt divided, part of it going down through the building the remainder and the other part running along the top of the horse stalls, and out at the where it also divided and ran down the rafters through the hay, and spilt the cement wall. These bolts struck the ground in two feet apart and three feet from two horses, which were under a strong tie to stay the buildings or hay did not take fire.

Mr. Wm. Milhaven, also on the milk stand, straining milk, and combining fire from the lightning ran past him. He was so shocked that he fell to the floor.

The electrical storm also did considerable damage to the frame dwelling of Mr. Wm. Sager, Napanee, on the Bridge st. The lightning played down the chimney, and the first floor of the upper frame several spots in the front and rear walls, and the plaster was also knocked off the walls; part of the foundation of the house knocked out and the roof around the chimney burned. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher, sitting in the dining-room, received a severe shock.

NEWBURGH.

On Saturday afternoon the local High School team played a friendly game of baseball with a Napanee team on the school grounds. Although in the season is young, fairly good ball was played, the locals pulling up an excellent game, giving the visitors a sound thrashing. Mr. Hanley, the little southpaw, was on the slab for the locals and burned in three innings when the visitors made three runs, which was practically all. He struck out fifteen of the opposing batsmen and did not give a base on balls, which is pretty nearly a record. The Newburgh team backed him up by excellent support so that the visitors could only get three hits off his delivery. Some team went after the ball in vigorous fashion, Armey rushing to the fence and bringing in three home with two men on bases. The rest of the game was well contested, Newburgh the smoke of battle had cleared away the blue and the red found to be the field, victors, by a score of 18-6. A GREAT SUCCESS.

The first educational contest for a gold medal was given under the auspices of the Eastern Methodist church Epworth League, last Thursday evening, and was a great success. The oratorical contest during the past winter. The seating capacity of the Town Hall was overtaxed, large numbers of people having to stand during the whole evening. The pastor of the church, Rev. W. H. Emsley, was chairman, and after the invocation, the Judges, Principal Flach, assistants Reid and Mowbray, of the Collegiate Institute staff, adjourned to the library. Miss Mabel Mills rendered a vocal quartette, by Messrs. Baughan, Black, Emsley and Wagar, with piano duet, Misses Helen Trimble and Beatrice Baughan, were rendered. The chairman then called for the Judges' report and Principal Flach, in a well chosen speech, which captivated the audience, and gave them a lesson in patience too, announced contestant No 2 to be their choice. Rev. H. Emsley presented the medal to the winner, Miss Mabel Mills, and heartily congratulated her on the wonderful progress she had made in elocution during the last few months. The reader all were their silver medals for whole programme well worth going, and much enjoyed by the people. Those who were not certainly missed a treat. We understand the series will be again taken up by the same management, early in September, and continued through the winter season. As they have been successful in the past, we all hope they will be even more so in the future.

For the Stomach Heart and Kidneys

Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a Cause Cure—not a Symptom Cure.

It is a common mistake to take artificial digestives for stomach troubles—or heart stimulants for disordered kidneys—or so-called kidney remedies for backache. These organs do not act separately—they all live in common accord—they have no control themselves—and not once in 80 times is the trouble with the fault of the organ. It is the fault of the nerves which control the organ—and Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a nerve tonic, and nothing else. Nothing else is a nerve tonic, either for heart disease, stomach trouble or kidney disease. Dr. Shoop's Restorative goes where the power nerves—that's why it relieves backache, heart disease, stomach trouble, kidney disease and all other troubles. For all of these ailments are not separate—they are from the selfsame cause—nerve weakness. Dr. Shoop's Restorative makes inside nerve weakness—nerves are restored—sickness disappears. The remedy which Dr. Shoop prescribed for his own nerves is known as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. It relieves the pain and distress of sickness, stomach and heart troubles quicker even than those medicines designed simply to give temporary relief. Dr. Shoop's Restorative can now be had of druggists everywhere. For sale and recommended by

The BRETHREN

By H. Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," etc. 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

"Shan," she answered, and they noted that she looked round quickly as she spoke the word.

"Oh," he said, "we thought the name was Jehal."

Now she stared at him with wide, wondering eyes, and replied:

"He is so called also; but, Sir Pilgrims, what know you of the dread lord Al-je-bal?"

"Only that he lives at a place called Masyaf, which we wish to visit."

Again she stared.

"Are you mad?" she queried, then checked herself, and clapped her hands for the slave to remove the dishes.

While this was being done they said they would like to walk abroad.

"Good," answered Masouda; "the man shall accompany you—nay, it is best that you do not go alone, or you might lose your way. Also, the place is not always safe for strangers, however humble they may seem," she added with meaning. "Would you wish to visit the governor at the castle, where there are a few Frankish knights, also some priests who give advice to pilgrims?"

"We think not," answered Godwin; "we are not worthy of such high company. But, lady, why do you look at us so strangely?"

"I am wondering, Sir Peter and Sir John, why you think it worth while to tell lies to a poor widow? Say, in your own country did you ever hear of certain twin brothers named Peter and John are they named?—Sir Godwin and Sir Wulf, of the house of D'Arcy, which has been told of in this land?"

Now Godwin's jaw dropped, but Wulf laughed out loud, and seeing that they were alone in the room, for the slave had departed, asked in his turn:

"Surely those twins would be pleased to find themselves so famous. But how did you hear of them, O widowed hostess of a Syrian inn?"

"I? Oh, from a man on the dromon who called here while I made ready your food, and told me a strange story that he had heard in England of a hand sent by Salah-ed-din—may his name be accursed!—to capture a certain lady. Of whom, I pray, rightly named Godwin and Wulf fought all that band also—ay, and held them off —a very knightly deed he said it was —while the lady escaped; and of how afterwards they were taken in a snare, as those are apt to be who deal with the Sultan, and this time the lady was snatched away."

"A wild tale truly," said Godwin. "But did this man tell you further whether that lady has chanced to come to Palestine?"

"Of that he told me nothing, and I have heard nothing. Now listen, my guests. You think it strange that I should know so much, but it is not strange, since here in Syria, knowledge is the business of some of us. I tell you then believe, O foolish children, that two knights like you, who have played a part in a very great game, are known or already whispers run throughout the East, could travel by land and sea and not be known? Did you then think that none were left behind to watch your movements and to send report of them to that mighty one who sent out the ship of war, charged with a certain mission? Well, what he knows I know. Have I not said it is my business to know? Now, why do I tell you this? Well, perhaps because I like such knights as you are, and I like that tale of two men who stood side by side upon a pier while a woman swam the stream behind them, and afterwards, sore wounded, charged their way through a host of foes. But in the East we love such deeds of chivalry. Perhaps also because I would warn you not to throw away lives so gallant by attempting to win through the guarded gates of Damascus upon the maddest of all quests."

"What, you still stare at me and doubt? Good, I have been telling you lies. I was not awaiting you upon the quay, and that porter with whom I seemed to quarrel was not charged to unstrike your baggage and bring it to my house. No spies watched your movements from England to Beirut. Only since you have been a guest of mine I visited your room and read some writings which, foolishly, you have left among your baggage, and opened your box in which other names than Peter and John were written, and drew a great sword from its scabbard on which was engraved a motto: 'Meet D'Arcy, meet Death!' and heard Peter call John Wulf, and John call Peter Godwin, and so forth."

"It seems," said Wulf in English, "that we are flies in a web, and that the spider is called the widow Masouda, though of what use we are to her I know not, unless, brother, 'what is to be done? Make friends with the spider?'"

"Ah, I'll ally," answered Godwin. Then looking her straight in the face he asked: "Hostess, who know so much, tell me why, amongst other names, did that donkey driver call you Daughter of Al-je-bal?"

She started, and answered:

"So you understand Arabic? I thought it. Why do you ask? What does it matter to you?"

"Not much, except that, as we are going to visit Al-je-bal, of course we think ourselves fortunate to have met his daughter."

"Going to visit Al-je-bal? Yes, you hinted as much upon the ship, did you not? Perhaps that is why I came to meet you. Well, your throats will be cut before ever you reach the first of his castles."

"I think not," said Godwin, and, putting his hand into his breast, he drew thence a ring, with which he began to play carelessly.

"Whence that ring?" she said, with fear and wonder in her voice. "It seems as though I had seen it before."

"From one to whom it was given, and who has charged us with a message. Now, hostess, let us be plain with one another. You know a great deal about us, but although it has suited us to call ourselves the pilgrims Peter and John, in all this there is nothing of which we need be ashamed, especially as you say that our secret is no secret, which I do well believe. Now, this secret being out, I propose that we remove ourselves from your roof, and go to stay with one of the people at the castle, where I doubt not, we shall be welcome, telling them that we would bide no longer with one who is called a spy, whom we have discovered also to be a 'daughter of Al-je-bal.' After which, perhaps, you will bide no longer in Beirut, where, as we gather, spies and the 'daughters of Al-je-bal' are not welcome."

She listened with an impassive face and answered:

"Doubtless you have heard that one of us who was so named was burned there recently as a witch!"

"Yes," broke in Wulf, "who now learned this fact for the first time; we heard that."

"And think to bring a like fate upon me. Why, foolish men, I can lay you both dead before ever those words pass your lips."

"Yea, think you can," said Godwin; "but for my part I am sure that this is not fated, and am sure also that you do not wish to harm us any more than we wish to harm you. To be plain, then, it is necessary for us to visit Al-je-bal. As chance has brought us together—if this chance will be said—in this, as I think you can, or must we seek other help?"

"I do not know. I will tell you after four days. If you are not satisfied with that, go, denounce me, do your worst, and I will do the like for which I should be sorry."

"Where is the security that you will not do it if we are satisfied?" asked Wulf bluntly.

"You must take the word of a 'daughter of Al-je-bal.' I have none other to offer," she replied.

That night Godwin said to Wulf:

"You said just now that was not fated, and although I have sought your company for my own pleasure, I have no quarrel with you—as yet. Choose your own path. Still, I tell you that if you go, who, chancing to know Arabic, have learned my secret, you die, and that if you stay you are safe—at least while you are in this house. I swear it on the token of Al-je-bal," and bending forward she touched the ring in Godwin's hand; "but remember that for the future I cannot answer."

Godwin and Wulf looked at each other. Then Godwin replied:

"I think that we will trust you, and stay," words at which she smiled a little as though she were pleased, then said:

"Now, if you wish to walk abroad, guests Peter and John, I will summon the slave to guide you, and in four days we will talk more of this matter of your journey, which, until then, had best be forgotten."

So the slave came, armed with a sword, and led them out, clad in their pilgrims' robes, through the streets of this Eastern town, where everything was so strange, that for awhile they forgot their troubles in studying the new life about them. They noted, moreover, that though they went into quarters where no Franks were to be seen, and where fierce-looking servants of the Prophet stared at them sourly, the presence of this slave of Masouda seemed to be sufficient to protect them from affront, since on seeing him the most of the scowling persons nudged each other and turned aside. In due course they came to the quay where the ship in which they knew, except two pilgrims who had been their fellow-passengers on the voyage, lay moored, were astonished when they said that they had been through the Saracen quarter of the town without let or hindrance, but were in the hands of the Christians, it was scarcely thought safe for Franks to venture where such a strong guard.

When the brethren were back in their chamber, agreed at the far end of it, and speaking very low, lest they should be overheard, they consulted together how they should act as to what they should do. This was clear—they had something of their mission were known, and therefore notice of their coming would soon be given to the Sultan Saladin. From the king and great Christian lords in Jerusalem they could expect no help, since to give it might be to bring about an open rupture with Saladin, such as the Franks dreaded, and for which they were ill-prepared. Indeed, if they went to them, it seemed likely that they would be prevented from stirring in this dangerous search for a woman who was the niece of Saladin, and for aught they knew thrown into prison, or shipped back to Europe. True, they might try to find their way to Damascus alone, but if the Sultan was warned of their coming, would he not cause them to be taken before they found, or cast into some dungeon where they would languish out their lives? The more they spoke of it the more they were perplexed, till at length Godwin said:

"Brother, our minds bade us earnestly to find out this Al-je-bal, and though it seems that to do so is very dangerous, I think that it is better to obey him who may have been given foresight at the last. When all paths are full of thorns what matter which you tread?"

"A good saying," answered Wulf. "I am weary of doubts and troublings. Let us follow our uncle's will, and visit this Old Man of the Mountains, to do which I think the widow Masouda is the woman to help us. If we die on that journey, well, at least we shall have done our best."

CHAPTER IX.

On the following morning, when they came into the eating-room of the inn, Godwin and Wulf found they were no longer alone in the house, for sundry other guests sat there partaking of their morning meal. Among them were a grave merchant of Damascus, another from Alexandria in Egypt, a man who looked to be an Arab chief, a Jew of Jerusalem, and none other than the English trader Thomas of Sarwich, the fellow-passenger, who greeted them warmly.

Truly they seemed a strange and motley set of men. Considering them as the young and stately widow Masouda moved from one to the other talking to each in turn while she attended to their wants, it came into Godwin's mind that they might be spies meeting there to gain or exchange information, or even to make report to their hostess, in whose pay perhaps they were. Still if so, of this they showed no sign. Indeed, for the most part they spoke in French, which all of them understood, on general matters, such as the heat of the weather, the price of transport animals or merchandise, and the cities whither they proposed to travel.

The trader Thomas, however, it appeared, had intended to start for Jerusalem that morning with his goods. But the sitting while he had bought proved to be lame from a prick in the hoof, nor were all his hired camels returned down from the mountains, so that he must wait a few days, or so he said. Under these circumstances he chose the brethren his company in their ramblings about the town. This they thought it wise not to refuse, although they felt little confidence in the man, believing that it was he who had found out their secret, if true names and revealed them to Masouda, either through talkativeness or with a purpose.

However these things might be, this Thomas proved of service to them, since although he was but just landed, he seemed to know all that had passed in Beirut since he left it, and all that was passing then. Thus he told them how Guy of Lusignan had just made himself King of Cyprus and on the death of the child Baldwin, and how Raymond of Tripoli refused to acknowledge him and was about to be besieged in Tiberias. How Saladin also was gathering a great host at Damascus to make war upon the Christians, and many other things, false and true.

In his company, then, and sometimes in that of the other guests—none of whom showed any curiosity concerning them, though whether this was from good manners or for other reasons it was hard to say—the brethren passed the hours profitably enough.

It was on the third morning of their stay that their hostess Masouda, with whom as yet they had no further private talk, asked them to her house, and not said that they wished to buy horses. On their answering "Yes," she added that she knew of such, but must first to bring two for them to look at, which were now in the stable beyond the garden. Thither they went, accompanied by Masouda, to find a grave Arab, wrapped in a garment of camel's hair and carrying a spear in his hand, standing at the door of the cave which served the purpose of a stable, as in those parts the East where the heat is so great. As they advanced towards him Masouda said:

"If you like the horses, leave me to bargain, and seem to understand nothing of my talk."

The Arab, who took no notice of them, saluted Masouda, and said to her in Arabic:

"Is it then for Franks that I have been ordered to bring the two price-less ones?"

"What is that to you, my Uncle, Son of the Sand?" she asked. "Get them to be led forth that I may know whether they are those for which I sent."

The man turned and called into the door of the cave.

"Flame, come hither!" As he spoke, there was a sound of hoofs, and through the low archway leapt the most beautiful horse that the eyes had ever seen. It was grey in color, with flowing mane and tail, and on its forehead was a black star, and behind it, but with a barrel-like shape of great strength, small-headed, large-eyed; wide-nostrilled, big-boned, but fine beneath the knee, and round-hoofed. Out it sprang snorting; then seeing its master, the Arab, checked itself and stood still by him as though it had been turned to stone.

"Come hither, Smoke," called the Arab again, and another horse appeared and ranged itself by the first. In size and shape it was the same, but the color was coal-black and the star upon its forehead white. Also the eye was more fiery.

"These are the horses," said the Arab, Masouda translating. "They are twins, seven years old and never backed until they were rising six, cast at a birth by the swiftest mare in Syria, and of a pedigree that can be counted for a hundred years."

"Horses indeed!" said Wulf. "Horses indeed! But what is the price of them?"

Masouda repeated the question in Arabic, whereon the man replied in the same tongue with a slight shrug of the shoulders.

"Be not foolish. You know this is no question of price, for they are beyond price. Say what you will."

"He says," said Masouda, "that it is a hundred gold pieces for the pair. Can you pay as much?"

"The brethren looked at each other. The sum was large.

"Such horses have saved men's lives ere now," added Masouda, "and I do not think that I can ask him to take less, seeing that, did he be sold here in Jerusalem they could be sold for thrice as much. But if you wish, I could lend you money since doubtless you have jewels or other articles of value you could give as security—that ring in your breast, for instance, Peter."

"We have the gold itself," answered Wulf, who would have paid to his last piece for those horses.

"They buy, but can they ride?" asked the Arab. "These horses are not for children or pilgrims. Unless they can ride well they shall not have them —no, not even if you ask it of me."

Godwin said that he thought so at least, they would try. Then the Arab, leaving the horses standing there, went into the stable, and with the help of two of the inn servants, brought out bridles and saddles unlike any they had seen. They were but thickly-quilted pads stretching far back upon the horses' loins, with strong hide girths strapped with wool and chased stirrups fashioned like half hoofs. The bits also were only snaffles without curbs.

When all was ready and the stirrups had been let down to the length they desired, the Arab motioned to them to mount. As they prepared to do so, however, he spoke some words, and suddenly those meek, quiet horses were turned into two devils, which reared up on their hind legs, and threatened them with their teeth and their front hoofs, that were shod with iron plates of iron. Godwin stood wondering, but Wulf, who was angry at the trick, got behind the horse that was striking his chance, put his hands upon the flanks of the stallion named Smoke, and with one spring leapt lightly into the saddle. Masouda smiled, and even the Arab muttered "Good," while Smoke, feeling himself backed, came to the ground again and became quiet as a sheep. Then the Arab spoke to Flame, and Godwin, who was also a lover to vault into the saddle also.

"Where shall we go?" he asked, as Masouda said they would show them, and, accompanied by her and the Arab, they walked the horses until they were quite clear of the town, to find themselves on a road that had the sea to the left, and to the right a stretch of fat land, some of it cultivated, above which rose the steep and stony sides of hills. Here the two pairs of the brethren trotted and cantered the horses to and fro, till they began to be at home in them, and then with Masouda who from childhood had ridden bareback in the Essex marshes, and the Arab who was prepared for what was needed to check or turn them. When they came back to where the path ascended, Masouda and the Arab were not afraid the seller wished to show them that the horses were both strong and swift.

"We fear no ride that he dares to take himself," answered Wulf angrily, whereon the Arab smiled grimly and said something in a low voice to Masouda. Then, placing his hand upon Smoke's flank, he leapt up behind Wulf, the horse never stirring.

"Say, Peter, are you willing to have a companion for this ride?" asked Masouda; and as she spoke a strange look came into her eyes, a wild look that was new to the brethren.

"Surely," answered Godwin, "but where is the companion?"

For reply was to do as the Arab had done, and seating herself straddle-legged behind Godwin, to clasp him around the middle.

"Truly you look a pretty pilgrim now, brother," said Wulf, laughing aloud, while even the grave Arab smiled and Godwin muttered between his teeth the old proverb "Woman, scrop, devil on bow." But aloud he said, "I am indeed honored; proceed Masouda, if harm should come of this, do not blame me."

"No harm will come—will you, friend Peter; and I have been no long cooped in an inn that I, who am desert-born, wish for a gallop on the open plains and feel a good horse beneath me and a brave knight in front. Listen, you brethren; you are to ride as you have been wont to ride your bridles loose, and where'er we go and whate'er we meet seek not to check or turn the horses Flame and Smoke. Now, Son of the Sand, we will test these nags of which you sing so long a song. Away, and let the ride be fast and far!"

"On your head be it then, daughter," answered the old Arab. "Pray that these Franks can sit a horse!"

Then his sombre eyes seemed to take fire, and gripping the cantle of the saddle girth, he uttered some word of command, at which the stallions threw up their heads and began to move at a long, swinging gallop towards the mountains a mile away. At first they went over cultivated land, of which the crops had been already cut, taking two or three ditches and a low wall in their stride so smoothly that the brethren felt as though they were seated upon swallows. Then came a space of sandy reward, but still they moved, where their pace quickened, after which they began to breast the long slopes of a hill, picking their way amongst its stones like cats.

Ever steeper it grew, till in places it was so sheer that Godwin must clutch the mane of Flame, and Masouda must cling close to Godwin's back to save themselves from toppling off behind. Yet, notwithstanding the double weights they bore, these gallant steeds never seemed to falter or to tire. At one spot they plunged through a mountain stream, Godwin noted that not fifty yards to their right this stream fell over a little precipice cutting its way between cliffs which were full eighteen feet from bank to bank, and thought to himself that had they struck it lower down the ride must have ended. Beyond the stream lay a hundred yards or so of level ground, and above it still steeper country, up which they pushed their way through bushes, till at length they came to the top of the mountain and saw the plain they had left from a height two miles or more below them.

"These horses climb hills like goats," Wulf said; "but one thing is certain: we must lead them down."

Then the Arab, who also mounted was a stretch of land almost flat and stoneless, over which they cantered forward, until they reached a spot where the horses recovered their wind till the pace grew fast. Suddenly the stallions threw themselves on to their haunches and stopped, as well they might, for they were on the brink of a river brawled in foam. For a moment they stood; then, at a touch of the sword from the Arab, turned round, and, bearing to the left, began to gallop back across the tableland, until they approached the edge of the mountainside, where the brethren thought that they would stop. But Masouda cried to the Arab, and the Arab cried to the horses, and Wulf cried to Godwin in the English manner:

"Show no fear, brother. Where they go, we can go."

Why God knows that the girths may hold," answered Godwin, leaning back against the breast of Masouda behind him. As he spoke they began to descend the hill, slowly at first, afterwards at a gradually more fast, till they rushed downwards like a whirlwind.

How did those horses keep their footing? They never knew, and certainly none that were bred in England could have done so. Yet never faltering, never stumbling even, on they sped, taking great rocks in their stride, till at length they reached the level piece of land above the stream, or rather above the fall of some fifty feet in width at the foot of which that stream ran. Godwin saw and turned cold. Were these folk mad that they would set double-laden horses at such a jump? If they hung back, if they missed their stride, if they caught their feet on the other side, it was their portion.

But the old Arab seated behind Wulf only laughed aloud, and Masouda only tightened her round arms about Godwin's middle and laughed in his ear. The horses heard the shout, and seeming to see what was before them, stretched out their long necks and inhaled forward over the flat ground.

Now they were on the edge of the terrible place and rising in the air. Godwin noted the sharp, sheer lips of the cliff, the gulf between them, and a pool of water at least fifteen or a score of yards beneath. Then he felt the brave horse Flame gather itself for the spring, and with a cry of fear in his air like a bird. Also—and was this dream indeed, or even as they sped over that fearful gulf did he feel a woman's lips pressed upon his cheek? He was not sure. Who could have been at such a time? Then he felt Flame's hind feet touch the ground with a shock that almost threw him forward over the horse's head, and Smoke, following close after, was also safe.

Now they were speeding down the hill, and alongside of the grey horse Flame raced the black horse Smoke. Wulf on its back, with eyes that seemed to be starting from his head, was shouting, "A race! A race! A D'Arcy!" and Godwin, turban gone, and white burnous floating like a pennon on the air, with grim-visaged Arab, was also shouted.

Swifter and yet swifter. Did ever horses gallop so before? Godwin felt his brother till the air sang past them and the ground seemed to fly away beneath. Now there was a dozen. They were on the flat; the flat was past, they were in the fields; the fields were left behind, and on they sped like birds, with banging heads and panting flanks the horses Smoke and Flame stood upon the road, their sweating sides dyed red in the light of the sinking sun.

Her grip loosened from about Godwin's middle. It had been close; on Masouda's round and supple body Godwin felt the print of the steel shirt beneath his tunic, for she slipped to the ground and stood there, while Godwin smiled one of her slow, thrilling smiles, gasped and said:

"You ride well, pilgrim Peter, and pilgrim John rides well also, and these are good horses; and, oh! that ride was worth the risking, even though death had been its end. Son of the Sand, my Uncle, what say you?"

"That if Allah wills it gallops—two on one horse, with nothing to win."

"Nothing to win?" said Masouda. "I am not so sure!" and she looked at Godwin. "Well, you have won my heart, pilgrim Peter who can ride, and they have proved them; and I have had a change from my cooking and will get me back again."

Wulf wiped the sweat from his brow, shook his head, and muttered:

"I always heard the East was full of devils and devils; now I know that it is true."

But Godwin said nothing.

Then they turned the beast to the inn, where the brethren groomed them down under the direction of the Arab, and fed them with corn which got mixed with wine.

Next morning at the dawn they rose to hear how Flame and Smoke fared that journey. Entering the stable they found the grey horse Flame trembling and hidden in the shadow, now by the low light of the morning it was seen that it was a mare, and with her head to them. On seeing who

JOE THE BANKER (3215)

This fine young horse is growing much in favor since his colts have shown up so good. His colts figured prominently at the fall fairs, and one owned by Mr. A. V. Price, of Wesley, took first prize, with its dam (not a large mare), in the 'yearling purpose class, at the Peterboro and Tamworth. Joe is well, muscled and a heavy boned horse, a beautiful bright brown with small star, has excellent feet and has proved a sure foal-getter.

There is, and always will be, a good demand for this class of horse, and if the breeders of to-day had a regular and adequate supply, a large class of horses would flow into the hands of the farmers.

We expect to have Joe this season's stable, Oak Flats, each Monday morning, coming to Moscow at night, where he will remain till Wednesday morning, then go to Joseph Yeomans' for noon, and W. A. Lasher's, Strathcona, for night; Thursday to Violet, Thorpe, and Camden East for night, returning home Friday noon, and on Saturday to Oak Flats, where he will remain till Monday morning.

NO VAR (3459)

Commonly known by his every-day name, "Sandy," has attained to a world-wide fame as a good healthy condition, and has never been over-done, so remains as fully as successful a getter this season as he has proven to be in the past one.

We have had a tempting offer to send this fine young horse to New York State for service by a gentleman who saw him here, but we have decided to send him right away, as the farmers here have given us a good patronage, and "Sandy" has a wide reputation as being one of the best Clydesdales in Ontario. His colts are well and favorably known, ranging from ten to eleven months old could not be bought for $100 each. Both Sandy and Joe balanced the scales at 1,765 lbs. on April 19th.

He will go to George Dean's, Yarker, each Tuesday afternoon, returning at night; then go to Enterprise Wednesday afternoon and from there to Centreville Thursday forenoon and home for night, where he will remain the balance of the week.

Health and weather permitting we expect the above routes will be continued. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Parties disposing of their mares before foaling time will be responsible for insurance. Parties trying mares and not returning them must pay fees. Bills for Service fees payable at Moscow, without further notice, when mare is parted with or mare's name being in foal. Money sent by registered letter or money order at our risk.

WARTS.

Youth's Companion.

An ordinary wart is a local overgrowth or hypertrophy of the papillary layer of the skin. It may be covered on the top with the epithelial layer, which gives it a smooth surface; or the epithelium may fail away and leave the separate strings showing at the point of the wart, like so many brown or black needle—whence the name of wart.

Warts of this kind occur most commonly on the hands of children. They are caused usually by the irritation of the many sorts of dirt which the youngsters' hands are so constantly plunged in—some probably that warts are slightly contagious, and they may be scattered by a scratch of the hand from direct contact.

Some warts are quite broad and flat, of a smooth surface and yellowish in color. Such occur frequently about the face in women, and often on the hands.

Another form of flat wart may come on the back in the aged. It is broad irregular in outline, uneven "scaly" surface, and sometimes covered with greasy scales.

(Warts vary a good deal in color, some are indistinguishable in color from the surrounding skin while others are pinkish, yellowish brown, or even quite black. The dark color may be due to the presence of pigment in the body of the wart, but it is more often, especially in children, a layer of dirt which has been worked down between the "scales." Soaking them in warm soap-suds and scrubbing with the nail brush will usually bring out the natural pinkish color.

Some warts are, however, constitutional growths, resembling true moles. These are more common on the skin of the chest, abdomen and back.

A wart is usually a trivial thing, but its removal is nevertheless advisable. Its prominence above the surface exposes it to irritation of the clothing which may keep it in a painful condition; it is never an ornament, and may be most unsightly; and, finally, it becomes getting along years, it may take on new growth and develop into a tumor.

In children warts come and go without apparent reason, and treatment is often unnecessary; but if they persist for a long time, or when they come on the adult skin, it is better to get rid of them. Sometimes soaking in warm soap-suds for ten minutes two or three times a day will cause the warts to disappear. This can be tried first, and if it fails an application of salicylic acid in collodion or touching the wart with a drop of glacial acetic acid on the end of a match will suffice.

ALYS BATEMAN COMING.

This eminent London soprano, whom experts claim will take the place left vacant by Madame Patti, has appeared several times before royalty, and is a great favorite among the aristocracy. She was a personal friend of the late Empress of Austria, and brings letters of introduction to His Excellency the Governor General, and President Roosevelt. At Bristol and Harrogate she was given a veritable ovation when she sang again and again for her singing of "Caro Nome," and "Il Bacio" with orchestra. In the concert audience to remarkable enthusiasm by her finished and effective methods. Apart from a marvellously beautiful voice, Miss Bateman has a strongly marked personality, combining a most unaffected simplicity with a charming charm of manner and exquisite taste in dress. Hear this great artiste at Bridge Street Methodist Church, Tuesday evening, May 22d. 20sp

"No man should be mulcted in damages who breaks a promise he has made to marry a woman who, he afterward learns, is afflicted with tuberculosis." This was the decision given by Superior Judge Albertson, of Seattle, in passing upon motion to strike out certain questions propounded in the suit of Rosena E. Grover against Mayor Cook, of Ballard, in which the young woman seeks to recover from him $25,000 damages for breach of promise. The court has declared the state had the right to prevent any marriage which would be dangerous to its welfare.

CLEANING UP SOILED WHITE FELT HATS.

White felt hats are always such a distressing way of showing soil that it is a good plan to have the right sort of cleaning materials about. Dry cleaning is almost always the best; there's no telling with liquids, for the soil may be spread, perhaps making an ugly little ring around the original spot.

French chalk, carefully rubbed into the felt, will often do the trick; a rather stiff paste made of powdered magnesia and water is also a good cleanser, and really is not to be used under the head of anything but a dry cleanser—there is no little water used, let it dry on, and then brush off very carefully.

There's a wonderful little block of some white stuff—it looks like a block of magnesia—that works like magic. All you do is to rub it on and brush off, and the work is done.

INSPECTOR OF TESTS.

The Ontario Government is talking of appointing and appointing an inspector to inspect the teeth of all school children, as bad teeth mean bad health. This is a very important move and should be talked up by every person. Every man, woman and child should brush their teeth at least twice a day and at the same time use a good Dentifrice and we know of nothing better than Wallace's Carbolic Tooth Powder. It cleans the teeth without injury to the enamel. Is very refreshing to use and prevents the gums from receding. Price 25 cents the bottle at The Red Cross Drug Store, Napanee.

EDUARD PARLOVITZ COMING.

This gifted young pianist, of London, England, late of the Martin Mills Quintette Party's ten months tour of the world), is well and most favorably known in Canada generally, having previous to above, made three transcontinental tours with that famous English house, and everywhere the public have tendered him the most flattering receptions. An interesting item from the Melbourne, Australia, "Argus" reads:—"An audience that so recently has been feasting on Paderewski's Chopin playing is supposed to be more than a little critical of any subsequent performer, but it is no exaggeration to say that Mons. Parlovitz's interpretation of this scherzo might stand alone with those of the older and greater master without shame. The thrill of that wonderful sudden cord was completely realized." The cement machinery has about all been removed to Marlbank, where the star brand is being manufactured.

There is a rumor that a Canning Co., from a distance are looking for a site on which to erect a canning factory. This is in our humble opinion the very place; there's plenty of water, a never failing spring which keeps two reservoirs filled belonging to the cement plant, another on the Wilson farm beside the river. This is a rich orchard settled locality, any number of hands could be employed; there are plenty of tenement houses ready for use. The school seems to be specially adapted to small fruits and vegetables in 1882 there was raised on the Madden farm two bushels of berries. Mr. Lasher last year had a tremendous crop of berries. He had no trouble in getting pickers to harvest them. People would go into the fruit raising strong if only sure of a market. Every farmer in the vicinity has an orchard of choice apples. There is not such another chance in the province for an enterprising company.

IT IS DANGEROUS TO NEGLECT A COLD.

How often do we hear it remarked: "It's only a cold," and a few days later learn that the man is on his back with pneumonia. This is of such common occurrence that a cold, however slight, should not be disregarded. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy counteracts any tendency to a cold to result in pneumonia, and has gained its great popularity and extensive sale by its prompt cures of this most common ailment. It always cures, and is pleasant to take. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store, 18d

RECORDS OF THE WRECK

TIMELY LESSONS FROM SAN FRANCISCO'S EXPERIENCE.

EARTHQUAKE'S BRIGHT SIDE

Found by Rev. Dr. Talmage In the Course of an Exhaustive Tramp All Around the City Which Trembled as the Lord Looked and Whose Hills Smoked When He Touched Them—'Frisco's Cheerful Victims.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Funk & Wagnalls Co., Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 13.—In this sermon the preacher records his observations during a tour of the wrecked city immediately after the disaster and draws some timely lessons from the experience. The text is Psalm civ., 32, "He looketh upon the earth and it trembleth: he touched the hills and they smoke."

Yes, I have been to San Francisco. I have felt the scorching breath and the sleet. With my own eyes I have seen the blackened, smoking ruins. I have walked amid the tottering walls. I have heard the exploding dynamite razing the ruins to the ground. Some things I could not get into the city to see. I did I would certainly be put to work cleaning the streets and piling up bricks. I cannot express what that was. I got into the city I would be quarantined and not be allowed to come out because the smallpox was raging there. And some people said I would get killed by the falling walls if I entered the burned district. And some said I would have to drink water out of the broken sewers and get typhoid fever if I ever entered the ruined city. What some people said of course did not happen. King Solomon understood this fact thousands of years ago when he wrote the proverb, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow." The man who simply goes ahead doing his work for God gives it to him to do will accomplish that work. And the man who is always looking for obstacles and dangers ahead will find these obstacles by the hundreds and thousands if he will only turn his timid ears and listen to what other people may say.

Obstacles ahead of me have impressed me like the steady stream of wagons and carriages and automobiles and electric cars which go rumbling down Broadway, in New York City. The average countryman who comes to the great metropolis for the first time stops at the curbstone and looks on with that amazement of vehicles in amazement. He stands on the curbstone, as I have often seen him stand, waiting for a cessation of those rushing wheels; but, like Tennyson's brook, men may come and men may go, but the vehicles on Broadway, New York, seem to go on forever. Not thus does the old New Yorker do. He wants to cross Broadway, but he only hesitates half a minute at the curbstone. He steps out into the street at once. He dodges this way; he dodges that way; he grips hold of the bridle of a horse here, and in a few seconds he is over the street. That is the way I did going to San Francisco, only a few days after it was burned. People said I could not get in, but I went ahead. I dodged this way; I pushed that way; I shoved a little here and begged there on until I not only crossed the ferry, but by Monday night following that catastrophe I had stumped over every nook and corner of the burned district. From the encampments in Golden Gate park into the burned out district of old Chinatown I went. Thus I am able to-day to render an account of my visit and teach a few gospel lessons from the "bright side of an earthquake."

"Oh," you say, "there is no need of talking about the 'bright side of an earthquake' when all are trying to talk about the lurid flames which, with their famished tongues, licked up nearly ten square miles of the city and made as any city ever had. Three hundred million dollars' worth of property was vorlasted in seven hours." A friend of mine on the morning that San Francisco burned, was coming from Honolulu. He was off at sea they say in the second clouds. They could not make out what was the matter. Nearer and nearer they came, until suddenly some one cried out, "San Francisco is burning!" Then they came nearer and they saw the awful flames in their work of death no one spoke. All was silence except the surging of the waters as the prow of the boat cut through them, and the steady panting and puff, puff, puff of the machinery.

Oh, do not talk to me about the bright side of an earthquake! Is there a bright side to Dante's inferno? Is there a bright side to streets strewn with corpses? Amid the ruins which you saw there must have been hundreds of unknown dead. Talk about the agonies and the tears and the wrecked fortunes of this holocaust if you will, but not about its bright side.' Yes, my friend, I am going to talk about the bright side of this earthquake even against your protest. For in all my trampings about this ruined town, and in my intercourse with these noble people, I found more bright sunniness than sorrow, more joy and congratulations than heart sobs and complaints. This is why I have taken for my subject the sunrise of the morning, instead of the dark eclipse.

The most natural work for me to pursue, in the first place, is to tell you that from the moment I put my foot into San Francisco in due time that I stepped aboard the ferry to start back for Oakland I did not find one tear or one complaint from all the multitude of people I saw and conversed with. And when I speak thus remember that I am not in the habit of minimizing the awful ravages of this earthquake. If you have been to New York and could imagine a fire starting at Forty-second street, burning clear on down to the battery and consuming all the lower hotel, every palace of Fifth avenue, every store and factory and office building and leaving practically nothing standing, you can imagine what this fire desolation means. Of course New York is a larger city than San Francisco, but the proportions I have drawn are about the same. Now, all through these burned districts the great Sahara parks where the homeless are encamped, all through the resident regions where the houses are still standing, I saw not one wet eye nor one face denoting sorrow. Yes, I misspoke myself. I did find one woman in tears. I turned to a physician in charge of this district and said, "That is the only picture I have seen of grief in all this city." He replied: "Yes; but that is more for the loss of her property. She is recovering from an attack of epilepsy, and she would have had this attack whether San Francisco burned or did not burn."

Now, what is the great practical gospel declaration of this universal cheerfulness and thankfulness which I saw amid the smouldering ruins of San Francisco? It is this: More than things you and I complain about are not in the least essential to true happiness. Let a man come home to his dinner and find his dinner late and there is no end of grumbling. Of course, I do not allude to your dinner or to your neighbor's. On account of the late dinner the business man crowls in a fury and he growls at his wife, and he growls at the children, and he growls at everything. Let a man lose a few thousand dollars in business deal and he is on the verge of nervous collapse and for days he is a bear to live ward the poorhouse. Let a man have an attack of indigestion and pessimism will find every star in the firmament falling and the groaning of the whole human race is but a groan of indigestion. But let a man be caught in a San Francisco earthquake and tossed about like a shuttlecock for half a day, then start and make him run a block to catch a train, let him be compelled to sleep out of doors without a blanket or a covering, for two nights; then let his house and store and all his property be burn up; then, instead of going around with lugubrious countenance, he will meet you with a smile on his face and say: "Thank God, I am alive! Thank God, my wife and children are alive! Thank God, we have a tent and are together!" The simple fact is some of us are complaining to-day not because we have too few troubles, but because we have too few troubles. In all the great city of San Francisco, amid its ruins and its ashes, its parks and its homes still standing, I saw not a man, woman or child who was complaining. The "Thank Gods" rendered everywhere had the most marvelous intonation. I believe that to-day God is more grateful for his mercy and kindness in our little troubles, as San Francisco is grateful to him amid the ruins of her best streets and her finest properties.

The second great fact which I heard amid those smouldering ruins was that when the better element of a city want it to be rescued the dark city is instantly becomes clean and the bad elements runs to cover as quickly as the tigers and the jackals flee to the jungles and as the prairie dogs' tails disappear into their holes at the sound of approach. When the buildings of San Francisco fell as flat as the walls of Jericho at the blast of the trumpets and then San Francisco arose in her moral and spiritual strength. San Francisco was not a city of fear and dread. The first few nights following the awful conflagration.

No sound did those huge office buildings and apartment houses and manufacturing hotels tremble and totter in the night as the robbers and the thieves and the libertines and the ghouls of the night clapped their hands and began to cry: "Aha! Now our harvesting time! All the wealth of San Francisco is lying where our hands can clutch it." But these thieves and robbers were congratulated themselves too soon. No sooner did these moral lepers start to loot than at once the police officers shot them down like mad dogs. No sooner did they try to enter the tumbled down stores and pick up the gold from amid those ruins than they were halted at the point of the bayonet. It was only necessary to look in the faces of the miscreants. Then these cowardly creatures—for they are always cowardly at heart—crouched in fear and begged for mercy and ran away from San Francisco by scores and hundreds to find safer quarters in other towns where justice was not so quickly dealt out.

Thus as I kept walking up and down those streets, where I felt as safe as a little child would feel in its mother's arms, I kept saying to myself: "With the fallen walls of San Francisco as an object lesson why will not every large and longer trife with evil doers? Why will a city like Chicago allow the holdup men to prowl about the streets? Why will they allow the lecherous hands of its ruffians to stretch forth and destroy its fairest and purest women? Why will we not do as Dias did in the capital of Mexico and as San Francisco has done? Why will we not make it a capital punishment for any man to put the pistol of a highwayman to our foreheads and demand our money? Why will we also not make it a capital punishment for any man to try to destroy the purity and sacredness of the home?" If the holdup crimes were dealt with as quickly and as severely in our eastern cities as they are to-day in the Pacific metropolis our streets would not only be safe, but the women—our wives and mothers and sisters and daughters—would be able to walk out at any time and be held as sacred as they are by our own firesides.

But the quick cessation of robbery and theft in San Francisco was not the only lesson of good government to be learned amid those smoking ruins. The new laws or the martial laws not only declared, "Thou shalt not steal," but they also affirmed, "Thou shalt not be an extortioner," and "Thou shalt not take an unfair advantage of the weaknesses of thy neighbors," for just as the murderers and the thieves were ready to loot their victims at the point of the pistol the extortioners were ready to squeeze the lifeblood out of their victims if they could do so in a legal way.

"How?" you ask. Well, let us for a moment picture ourselves in this burned city. The flames in the business portion seem to have destroyed the water pipes and the gas pipes and the electric wires are broken. The escaping gas has been ignited by the live wires. The fire engines are helpless, for the water supply is gone. The flames are creeping nearer and nearer to your house. You rush forth frantically to hunt up an expressman. "How much?" you ask. "Will you carry my trunks out of the reach of danger?" "Give me fifty or a hundred dollars," is the answer. "Can't you do it for less?" "No," he says; "there are only a few wagons, and we can get any price we want." Or the flames have burned themselves out and there are only a few bakery stores left. You enter one and ask for bread. "How much is a loaf?" "One dollar," says the baker. "Can't you sell it cheaper for less?" "No. I can raise my price, and instead of getting 5 cents a loaf I am going to get a dollar." Or the man the condition confronting the people of San Francisco during and immediately after the conflagration. Now what happened? Why, General Funston sent forth orders something like this: "If any man who has a horse and wagon is found overcharging confiscate his wagon and horse. If any man who owns a bakery store is found overcharging take away his store and drive him out from behind the counter." Thus we find that in the darkest hour of the San Francisco horror the baker was not allowed to charge more than an honest, fair price for his bread nor the expressman to overcharge for his vehicles. The extortioner was not then permitted to fatten upon the lifeblood of his neighbors.

But there was still another fact which wonderfully impressed me amid those ruins. Though there were some mean and contemptible people living in San Francisco, as there are mean and contemptible people living in all cities, yet the vast majority of people lie in heart and deed and were ready to step forth and help those who could not help themselves. I was made to appreciate this self-sacrifice so much more by the outsiders who came to San Francisco during the first few days after the city had been burned out. It was the grandest sight I ever saw. Having lost their all, there were thousands upon thousands who not only suffered in silence, but in their sufferings gave their substance and energy to care for others. This help was not given by people of only one class, but by people of all stations. The aristocrat was there working side by side with the plebeian, and the scholar with the illiterate man. There they were all working side by side to help each other.

But I cannot close without one other word of congratulation as well as of warning. Within a few hours Sacramento sent her donations. Then came Los Angeles with her carloads. Then the Portland and the Denver trains filled with food supplies came rolling in, while off in the distance we could hear the revolving wheels of trains coming from cities of the far east. San Francisco would have starved to death had not this help come. And so plentifully did it come that I believe there was not a hungry man, woman or child in all the city when I was there. By the beneficent contributions of her sister cities San Francisco was not only fed, but well fed. So impressed was I with this fact that, though I had only a few pocket pieces given to me to distribute to the sufferers, I found no one hungry and no one naked.

Now, what did I say to them as on the ferry? "San Francisco is having a hard time now, but the hardest time will be those days that are ahead. In a few weeks this free distribution of food and clothing will stop. Then laborers will go to work, and there will be plenty of work for every able-bodied man who can work in the streets or at other manual labor. Then will the pinch is to come. It will come to the widow and the old folks who cannot work with their hands. It will come to the boarding-house keeper and to the young girls and 'the invalids.'" Then I took some of that money and gave it to the San Francisco relief committee and said: "You distribute this money to the suffering poor of the household of faith. Do not distribute it now, but within a few weeks. Then it will be sorely needed. Within five weeks there will be a dozen times more sufferers in San Francisco where there are only ten now." Thus I beg and implore the big hearted men of the United States and Canada in their contribution for the San Francisco sufferers. Do not feel because the cities did them over the first few days that this is all the help that will be needed.

But the earthquake has disclosed a bright side in still another sense. God was it to hear the awful news of the suffering. But no sooner did the news come than all over the land our churches and our people went to work. Our children gave. Fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers all gave. The churches were turned into receiving stations. And some men and women who never knew what it was to give in their lives did in and went to work. Then, strange to say, not only did our work bring happiness to others, but our sacrifices have brought happiness to ourselves. As we worked and labored for others we found that the Lord, the heavenly joy, coming to ourselves. In giving our lives for others we felt the rewards in our own hearts a hundredfold. May we continue, with God's help, to find a gospel joy in helping the sufferers in our cities. May we continue to be food for the hungry, clothes for the naked, medicine for the sick and homes for the homeless. Then not only will we bless others, but Christ will smile upon us his divine benediction, as he has done for so many during the past few days as we labored for the San Francisco sufferers.

Remarkable Invention.

The microphotoscope, invented by a Berlin chemist, though no larger than a cigar case, permits of consulting the books in the library while sitting in the best underwear. The map is photographed in miniature on a plate of glass or metal, which is illuminated by a small incandescent lamp supplied when required with current from a battery, while a lens can be adjusted to the observer's sight.

The Explorer.

A gas leak he sought with a lighted match,
And he searched and he searched all around it,
And, though we have never seen him again,
There's indisputable proof that he found it.

St. Vitus Dance, Neuralgia and Headaches Common Among School Children.

St. Vitus dance is a disease that is becoming more and more frequent among school children. Losing posture; the nerves with study and worry. Sometimes the trouble takes the form of neuralgia, causing terrible headaches, pain in the arms of the limbs and muscles, and sometimes St. Vitus dance. In other cases St. Vitus dance is the result of fright. The victim loses all control of the limbs, which keep twitching and writhing in the most distressing manner. There is only one way to cure this trouble through the blood which gives health and vigorous nerves. And Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the only medicine that can make this new rich, red blood that feeds the nerves and gives every part of the body. The case of Flossie Dean, of Grow Sound, Muskoka, is one of the many in which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, Mrs. Dean tells us, have cured her little daughter. Flossie was dangerously afflicted with St. Vitus dance. She became so nervous that after a time she could not go to school or see her friends. She could not pick up a dish, face her silence, or make any movement to help herself. She had grown thin and very pale, and she had been treated by several doctors, but without any benefit. It seemed as if she would waste away and she (now a strong, healthy girl.

If your growing children are weak or nervous, if they are pale and thin, lack appetite or complain of headaches or backaches, give them Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and see how speedily the rich, red blood these pills make will transform them into bright, active, robust boys and girls. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHEN THE SNOW FALLS.

John C. Johnson, the well-known Carter's Little Liver Pills, was hastening down Chestnut street on a snowy morning.

"Weather like this," he said, "reminds me of an early case of mine. It was a real estate case, a contention over the ownership of a certain few feet of ground, and I was confident that we should win, for all the facts and arguments were on our side.

"Hence I was amazed when my client, at the beginning of his cross-examination, was asked if he had not stated, as lately as the previous January, that the disputed ten feet of ground did not belong to him, but to his adversary, the next-door neighbor who was now fighting his claim.

"'Yes,' my client answered, 'I did state that.'

"His admission amazed me more than ever, and I leaned forward in my chair, wondering what would come next.

"'In the presence of witnesses,' said the cross-examining lawyer, 'you declared that these ten feet belonged not to you, but to Mr. Parks. Is that not right?'

"'Quite right. Quite right, sir,' said my client.

"'Then, after such an admission,' shouted the lawyer, 'how dare you, how dare you, sir—come into this court and claim the strip of land as your own?'

"'Well,' said my client, 'it was just after I had taken Carter's Little Liver Pills that I said the ten feet belonged to Neighbor Parks. We were both shoveling off our premises at the time.'

"I see Jack Ketcham has been married to Miss Taylor."

"Yes," said Mrs. Corntossel; "I'm sorry to see 'em go."

"Sorry? For her sake or his?"

"I wanted her."

The Mistress—Mary Ann, has the furnace gone out?

The New Cook—If it has, ma'am, it must have gone out through the cellar window, cos it ain't come through here, ma'am.

Miss—Th' feller live by robbin' th' poor.

Pa—Tis; 'tis a mystery phwere th' poor git all th' money they are robbed of.

Diamonds Down in Price.

We have just closed an agreement with a large diamond cutting factory in Belgium, whereby they supply us the cut stones direct. We thus save the importing jobbers' profit.

This advantage in buying but few firms in Canada obtain. We must make large purchases, but with the advantages we have to offer will greatly increase our output.

Our first parcel of TWENTY PERFECT GEMS just arrived this week direct from the cutter's wheel.

Call and see them.

A Tonic for the Debilitated. — Parmelee's Vegetable Pills by acting mildly but thoroughly on the digestive organs of the body are a valuable tonic, stimulating the lagging organs to healthful action and restoring them to full vigor. They can be taken in graduated doses and so used that they can be discontinued at any time without exciting the ailments which they were used to allay.

Bob despondingly—I said something my wife didn't like, and she hasn't spoken to me for two days.

Jack, cheerfully—Then you remember what it was you said?

To Prevent Is Better Than to Repent—A little medicine in the shape of the wonderful pellets which are known as Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, administered at the proper time and with the directions advised to often prevents a serious attack of sickness and much money which would go to the doctor. In all irregularities of the digestive organs they are an invaluable corrective and by cleansing the blood they clear the skin of impurities.

Old Sixteen—Huh! So you want to marry my daughter, eh?

Young Man—Well, I guess that's about the size of it.

Old Sixteen—Um-yes. Can you support her in the style to which she has been accustomed?

Young Man—I can—but I'm not mean enough to do it.

The Critic in the Back.—"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," quoth the few but verbal; but if it be a touch of rheumatism and lumbago, which is so common now? There is no poetry in that touch, for it rends the life miserable. Yet how delightful is the sense of relief when an application of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil draws pain away. There is nothing equals it.

Lady, at book store—I want to get a good novel to read on the train — something rather pathetic.

Salesman—Let me see. . . . How would "The Last Days of Pompeii" do?

Lady—Pompeii? I never heard of him. What did he die of?

Salesman—I'm not quite sure, ma'am —some kind of an eruption, I've heard.

These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effectual, are to be found in Mother Seaton's Worm Exterminator. Children like it.

A T. Quiller-Couch told a Cornish story the other day in presenting certification to the members of an ambulance class in his own town of Troy. "Years ago," he said, "an old Cornish fisherman at a similar class was asked how he would treat the apparently drowned.

"Well," he replied, "the first thing we always did was to empty the fish's pockets."

When all other corn preparations fail, try Holloway's Corn Cure. No pain whatever, and no inconvenience in using it.

"Judge," said the old colored citizen, "how much fer a license ter git married?"

"Want it for yourself?"

"Yes, suh. You see, I gittin' mighty nigh ter forty."

"That's evident. Then, why do you wish to marry?"

"Well, Jedge, ter tell de truth, somebody gimme a red flannel, linen collar an' a walkin' cane, an I knows a woman what says she kin make a livin' fer me and I feels like I needs a honeymoon."

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to those testing it. Gives immediate relief to those suffering from the above and indigestion. A delicate tonic fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

A Bishop addressing a Sunday School class said: "Only think, children! In Africa there are 1,000,000 miles of territory without a single Sunday School where little boys and girls can learn about God. Now what should you all try and say up our money to do?"

"Go to Africa," responded the class in unison.

The proprietor of a large drug store recently received this curt and haughty note written in a regular, bold hand:

"I do not want vaseline, but glisser ine. Is that plain enough? I pronounce you can spell."

Hicks—My hair comes out in handfuls. Is there anything I'll soon be bald.

Wicks—Nonsense, if it keeps on you can't be baldheaded.

Lady—What is the real difference between an apartment, a flat, and a tenement house?

Janitor—In an apartment the ladies have no children; in a flat they have one or two. More than two makes any house a tenement, mum.

If the children require physic none can excel in ease as Baby's Own Tablets; very pleasant to take. For sale at The Medical Hall.—Fred'k. Hooper.

W. S. Williams' Letter.

Oakland, Cal., May 9th, 1906.

Dear Beaver,—At 5.15 on the morning of the 19th day of April last, San Francisco was shaken violently by an earthquake, which did considerable damage to quite a number of buildings. It also broke one of the water mains. The "Quake" occurred at a time when the fires were being built in the furnaces and in many instances were not soon broke out in many buildings and spread rapidly and fiercely. The fire-men could not extinguish the flames on account of no water, and for three days the city was ablaze and nearly 5,000 acres of buildings were consumed. Many of those were the best and most costly in San Francisco. It is said by many that about $400,000,000 worth of property was destroyed. In addition to the property destroyed the loss of life and the suffering of those who escaped, is beyond description.

Oakland suffered but little, a few chimneys tumbled down, plaster knocked off of the brick walls, and plate glass in a few of the stores was broken. None of the brick walls in some of the buildings which were not properly erected suffered somewhat. . . . It is supposed over 100,000 people, refugees from San Francisco, came to Oakland, who are being clothed and fed by our citizens. Churches, theatres, public halls, dwellings, parks, school houses and many other places are occupied by these people. Many of the refugees escaped with nothing but the clothes they wore. San Francisco will rise again and be in a few years a more beautiful city. Nothing undaunted, them Westerners will with a determination hitherto unknown, rebuild, and San Francisco will soon be the pride of the Golden West, and one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Oakland is profiting by this unfortunate occurrence. We regret this occasion, but our city is filled with buyers of real estate, the prices of lands and houses are doubling in value. Every dwelling, store, office, warehouse is filled, and new buildings are being erected for our former San Francisco business men. Rentals are fabulous. Our business streets to-day are as lively as Broadway, New York City. Railroads, steam ship companies, professional men, superintendents of all kinds who were doing business in San Francisco are now located in the Oakland. Wholesale houses and manufacturers are with us and we believe our city which is so well situated, being the terminus of San Francisco Bay, which is the terminus of all our transcontinental railroads that we will have a city of half a million people in the near future.

The Great Calamity and its Lessons, was the subject of Rev. Dr. R. H. Dille's sermon at the First Methodist Church, Oakland, yesterday morning, and the report said in part:

"In the duty of the Christian Church to be interpreted at least to apply God's providences. Shall a great calamity befall a nation, a city grown big-hearted while the long red tongues of fire are licking up the dwellings, merry in dumb? Alas for the city sitting like Tyre in its sorrow, the merry of the sea; today the ashes with ashes upon its head and garments rent, into the beautiful bay that once mirrored her stately glory have come the ghosts of her dire figurement. Oh, the dark days of April 18th and 19th, when San Francisco was an awful furnace covering over 2,000 acres, containing nearly seven square miles of burnt district, while that of Chicago only 2.43 square miles; a furnace not seven times but one hundred times more heated, in which steel curled up like paper and granite turned to lime, a furnace that burned up five hundred millions of property. Why was this permitted to be?

"But we are not arrest to providence by the cry, 'Why permit or cause this?' Why should such a scene of suffering have befallen the people of San Francisco's sins; true, they have been neither few nor venial; but if it be in judgment, why should the good and bad suffer in common? Why should not the frugal and the skillful and the industrious be saved, and the prodigal and unthrift and built up society, but that there is a moral principle in the world who had nothing before? The poor's are not brought to the depth of misery the less he suffered; and the other a man may through his own fault or theft the more he suffer—the fairer will be the process for the hundred fold of calamity. There is the young man who after years of honest effort has got his foot on firm foundations of prosperity and hope in an hour he finds himself on a level with the idle and dissipated fellow who has lived a parasitical life upon society.

"We may not call this the judgment of God. It is not our place to be the prophet and assume the rod. Refudge like Jaeffe to the Gods of self-satisfaction and altruism it has called forth. Think of the men who left their own goods, that they were conveying to places of safety, to help strangers' boxes; of men who left their own burning dwellings to help in other of the city on fire; of humble expressmen who might have commanded fabulous prices for their services in transporting their little belongings of the poor out of reach of the flames.

"Then, too, what a manifestation there has been of the brotherhood; the thrill of sympathy that has well through the whole nation, yea, through the world, shows that we are all one family. Even when the fire was quenched trains were on their way from every part of the land with provisions for the hungry, and $200,000 and more per hour was raised a lot of bread, none went more than a few hours hungry, but in the whole of California, all the granaries of the West, all the bank vaults of the land and of the world; all the resources of the Government at Washington were brought into instant requisition. A mother turns not more quickly to the fire than the nation turned to San Francisco when she threw herself in her distress upon the great heart of the American people.

"It is almost worth all that was lost —this spontaneous outburst of sympathy. All the bonds of sectarian and class fighting with in sectarian and class prejudice and provincialism and race are melted in the fires, and while the drums beat to arms, as it is to the music of the heart-beat that we are stirred.

"In the great calamity there has been exhibited the greatest love of God for mankind. This nation, in fact the whole world has been the channel that makes mankind kin. And from every quarter of the Globe sympathy has been sent to our sufferers.

"It has refreshed our hearts much above the "Quake" as Fred Mac. R. Robinson and Harry is "Frisco" have written good and veritable descriptions. I would like to meet the above named parties. Every of transportation Companies have vied with each other to carry to our doors

LITTLE POCKET PHYSICIAN.

HYOMEI INHALER THAT NEVER FAILS TO CURE CATARRH.

Thousands who have been cured by Hyomei call the inhaler that comes with every outfit "The little pocket physician," as it is one device that it can be carried in the pocket or purse.

Prior to the discovery of Hyomei, statistics showed that at least 97 out of every 100 persons in this state suffered from catarrh in one form or form. The remarkable results following the use of Hyomei are shown by the smaller percentage to-day of people suffering from catarrh.

A complete Hyomei outfit consists of the little pocket physician, a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hyomei, and costs only $1, while additional bottles of Hyomei can be procured for 50 cents, making it the most economical, as well as the most reliable treatment for the cure of catarrh.

Do not delay longer the use of Hyomei, if you have catarrh. This is a purely local disease, and Hyomei is a purely local disease, and Hyomei is a purely local disease, and Hyomei

Wesley, May 15th, 1906.

Dear Miss Wartman,

We have met together to-night as your former Sunday School class to bid you a formal adieu as teacher, and to express our appreciation of your apparently untired zeal to make us better and to give us instructions how to enter into the new life that makes the journey through this world pleasant and peaceful. We thank you for the number of times you have entertained us in your home, taking pains to make the gathering pleasant and instructive.

Please accept this fountain pen as a token of love and remembrance, hoping it will give you good service, and that you may live many years to work in the vineyard of the Lord. We wish to take this opportunity of expressing our sympathy for you in your late bereavement and hope that the God that you taught us to reverence will help you to bear your loss with christian fortitude.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THAT?

She said to her husband as they passed Fred. L. Hooper's Drug Store, where a lady was standing in the window, combing her long beautiful hair. Just to think of it, one woman having so much hair, and I have not enough to keep my hat on well. Her husband said "You can have more if you use what they do That lady is one of the Seven Sutherland Sisters."

A SAD DEATH.

Very sad indeed was the death of Mrs. Wm. Cranston, which occurred at the home of her father, Mr. A. F. Bell, Napanee, on May 12th, leaving behind a little daughter, eleven days old. Although she had been a sufferer for five years past, her death came very unexpectedly. But her faith was strong in her God, who saw it was best to take her to himself. She had been a Christian from her youth up, and was of a very kind disposition, making many warm friends who regret her death, but may well feel that what is their loss is her gain. She was resigned to go to meet her Saviour, and warned her loved ones that she unpardoned sin would keep them from meeting her again in the great beyond. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Wesley Down, of the Bay circuit, taking his text from 116 Psalm, 15th verse. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." She leaves behind her a sorrowing husband, who, a little over a year ago went to California to claim her as his bride, her parents, five brothers and two sisters, Atwold, Mount Pleasant; Mrs. Cranston, Campbell, Moscow; Seymore and Rev. Fraser Bell, of Manchester, North Dakota; Mrs. Ernest J. May, of Orrville, and Alexander, at home, to mourn her loss. This being the first to be broken in the family her death is felt very keenly.

GREAT WORK OF PHILANTHROPY.

In the counties of Lennox and Addington, according to the latest report of the Registrar General for Ontario, there were 81 deaths from tuberculosis in the year from the united counties, with a population of 40,810. This is nearly 1-3 deaths per 1000 people, and is almost twice the number from any other disease. Of these 81 deaths, 47 were male and 34 female, 29 Canadians, 2 foreigners, 15 were single and 34 married, 4 were under 12 years of age, and the average age at death was 34 years.

Statistics also show that the greatest mortality is among the younger married women, and has impressed the fact, that in looking to the future generations of this country, every care known to science should now be taken to check this terrible disease, and every assistance be given to the work now being carried on.

Since the Muskoka Hospitals started eight years ago the Registrar General reports a decrease in the number of deaths from consumption of over 20 per cent. This is a splendid record, and also shows that with more sanitariums, and skilled treatment, the disease can, before very many years, be entirely stamped out. A grant every help should be given by each municipality, and private citizens who are able to do so, to the Free Hospital for Consumptives at Muskoka. This hospital is for poor patients and no one has been refused admittance on account of poverty. A number of counties have endowed beds, at a cost of $300, in this hospital, so the consumptive poor of their county may have free treatment. The united Counties of Lennox and Addington will this year be asked to do likewise, and it is hoped they will follow the example of other counties in this respect.

Mr. G. L. Jennings, Field Secretary of the Free Hospital for Consumptives at Muskoka, is in town for a week or so, in the interests of endowing a bed from Napanee. He has been assured of the interest of the townspeople in the matter, and a grant will also be asked from the Town Council. A branch association will be formed of those interested in the work, the names of which will be given later. All subscriptions of whatever size will be most gratefully received, and acknowledged in the local press.

STELLA.

The electric storm on Saturday evening was a severe one. The house of Mr. Henry Filson was struck and the roof caught fire, and had the shingles not been well laid in cement it could not have been saved. However, as it was early in the evening help was at hand to extinguish the water bandy. In the room where the family were sitting the fire came down through the box store and ignited the carpet in several places, which was soon extinguished. Although Mr. Filson was slightly stunned, no one was permanently injured. A bridge near the foot of our island was also struck and large stones scattered so that the whole bridge went to pieces.

Farmers are through seeding and getting ready for planting.

There seems to be plenty of work for our young doctor, F. Gloria, and Dr. Nash, who spends one day in each week here, is well patronized.

There are to be confirmation services in St. Alban's church this evening, and we understand there is a large class ready for the rite.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBES

The Literary Life of Mrs. Craigie.

The brightest, wittiest and keenest of contemporary writers is Mrs. Craigie, better known to the world of letters as John Oliver Hobbes. Her specialty is human nature; she delights to vivisect humanity as a whole, to put some poor struggling emotion under the microscope of her investigation and minutely dissect and lay bare its every fibre, as delivered in epigrams, clear, crisp, brilliant as they are, but always clever. She stimulates thought in her readers; she irritates at times, arouses antagonism, challenges opposition, but she forces attention. The threads of her destiny unite her to the United States by birth and ancestry, to England by adoption and education, and to Canada by marriage, being the daughter-in-law of Ernest Craigie of Montreal. She was born in 1867, daughter of John Morgan Richards, now one of the wealthiest druggists in London, she came from an ancestry of four Puritan divines on one side and a line of Welsh physicians on the other, her great grandfather being a member of the Halifax Parliament long before the Declaration of Independence.

When a child of three she was taken on the usual tour through Europe, the beginning of her many travelling experiences. She was a very early age she showed preliminary symptoms of her appetite for literature in her unstatable reading of the books of others, and in attempting to add her few crops to the ocean of literature. At one she received a prize for a story "Lost, a Dog," contributed to Dr. Joseph Parker's paper "The Fountain," but did no serious literary work until after her marriage. She was educated at London, England, and took high honors in Classics and Paris, receiving much of her training at the Royal Academy of Music.

When only nineteen she was married to Reginald Walpole Craigie of the Bank of England, and her brief and unhappy matrimonial experience was terminated in 1895 by a divorce in which her young son was given into her custody. With him she went to the beautiful home of her parents, a delightful, solid, old-fashioned mansion at Lancaster Gate, one of the fine residential sections of London. One Ingredient of

Zutoo

Is soda—just old-fashioned soda, that our grandmothers took to settle the stomach.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, important for us from Japan. It went hurt you any more than will the soda.

The other ingredients of Zutoo are just as harmless.

A Few Good Things Said by

Women

About Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets

We wish every run-down woman and every woman suffering from some disorder peculiar to her sex could read the letters we have from grateful users of Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets.

They would never afterwards doubt our statement that "They make Healthy Women."

We never violate confidence. We never yet published a letter without permission, but there is nothing wrong, however, in giving the following snatches from letters recently received.

"I think they are just wonderful."

"In less than a week I could see good results."

"I couldn't have got more good if I had gone to see Dr. Hugo himself."

"My physician gave me the first box."

"I am feeling now like a new woman, have better color, eat better, sleep better, feel better."

"Health Tablets have done for me what my physician seemed unable to do, i.e., made me a healthy woman."

These few abstracts show the appreciation in which these tablets are held by those who have used them.

If you are sick or not feeling as well as you would like to, we want you to take a box of these tablets.

You can't realize until then how much good one box will do you.

They Make Healthy Women.

THE SAN FRANCISCO THAT WAS AND THE SAN FRANCISCO THAT IS TO BE.

San Francisco Examiner.

It seems to me that notwithstanding all that has been published, considerable misconception must still exist in the East of the causes and consequences of the great San Francisco disaster.

I know that while I myself was very familiar with the locality and the conditions here I had failed to appreciate exactly the situation until I had visited the scene.

There may be said to have been two distinct calamities—the earthquake and the fire.

The earthquake, being a mysterious and unusual event, has appealed to the imagination of all writers, and the effects of the earthquake have been enlarged upon and exaggerated. On the other hand, the terrible destruction of fire has never been adequately described—never will be, never can be. Words and pictures as well fail to convey any conception of such complete destruction, such utter annihilation.

Which I reached Sacramento on my way to San Francisco, I began to look for evidences of the earthquake. There were practically none. I asked the railroad officials about the sunken tracks, the ruined roadbeds, stories of which had been telegraphed East. The officials said there had been no grain of truth in those rumors, that trains had been run without interruption and not one foot of track in the Sacramento valley had been disturbed. The route between Sacramento and San Francisco I saw but half a dozen houses that had been effected in the least by the earthquake, and in these without exception brick chimneys flimsily constructed of materials of inferior quality had been destroyed. Of the substantial buildings of brick or stone structures and steel structures had resisted the shock almost without exception. On reaching Oakland I found that not one per cent. of the buildings had been seriously injured and that beyond that one per cent. the damage consisted entirely of cracked plaster and dranged chimneys. In my own house, for instance, two chimneys had been thrown down and there was no other damage.

I had come to think that the whole disaster had been exaggerated, and when I boarded the ferry for San Francisco I had begun to hope that it was less dreadful than I had expected.

As the boat drew near the San Francisco side, however, the fearful havoc of the actual destroyer, the fire, began to appear. The destruction was so utterly complete—so impossible to compare the burned district with what remained unburned—that nothing remained unburned. The burned district with what remained unburned. The burned district was one vast waste of ashes, except for the outlines of what I looked for the outlines of the once familiar gutted buildings. There were hardly any of these. The fire had not only been burned, but burned to the ground.

When I landed from the ferry the sensation of the disaster was overpowered me. There was nothing to be seen but a dead, unburied brick twisted iron and blackened timbers. Our Market street, along which we could reach three miles, was nothing but ruins. North to the bay, west to the Mission, nothing but ruins. The whole wide district was destroyed. The result district was destroyed, the manufacturing district, the financial district, the water front section — all destroyed. The hills rolled to the sea as bare as when the pioneers made the days of '49. But the shrubs there are but twisted and shriveled stumps, and instead of the trees there are burned brick chimneys and ragged fragments of walls towering above the desolation that surrounds them.

I will not attempt any detailed description of this scene, for I know that no description can give me the slightest understanding of what had occurred, and I do not believe that any words of mine could convey to a reader the slightest comprehension of this interminable area of wreck and ruin. Indeed, to get any sort of accurate impression one must fire the mind of the idea that there has merely been a fire, no matter how great. In San Francisco must realize that the fire here has been a fire of San Francisco; the whole city has gone up in one mighty blaze that roared and raged and burned for three days and nights and left nothing standing but a fringe of houses on the two southern and western limits.

If a bonfire of barrels and boards and packing boxes had burned until it had burned itself out, and instead of these ashes there remained smoke few stacks on the edges that had not been wholly destroyed. So it is with San Francisco. The city burned unchecked for days without water, without effective hindrance of any kind. When the fire stopped it had practically burned itself out. It had got to where the houses were so thinly scattered that there was difficulty in finding fuel for the flames.

Think of this fact:

The area of the Boston fire, added to the area of the Chicago fire, added to the area of the Baltimore fire would not make altogether one-half the area of the San Francisco fire. New York is so much larger than San Francisco that a mere comparison of square miles does not give an adequate idea of the situation, but relatively and comparatively proportionately it is as if the whole of Manhattan Island, Brooklyn excepted, save a mere handful of buildings in the Bathers and as if there remained only the Bronx and Brooklyn.

Brooklyn corresponds in a way to Oakland, although Oakland is several miles from San Francisco and across the bay. The Bronx corresponds to the section of more or less scattered residences runnning on the western edge of the city.

Think of the water front districts of New York swept clean by fire. Think of Wall street in ruins. Think of the East side and the West side destroyed. Think of all Broadway burned to the ground. Think of the wholesale districts destroyed. Think of all the big stores from Wanamaker's to Siegel-Cooper's. Think of the beautiful residences on Fifth avenue burned to the ground. Think of entire Harlem of the very areas in the Bronx and Manhattan and shriveled in the flames. Think of the streets literally torn into bristling tracks of charred timbers two or even four and six feet high, so that you can hardly walk on them or climb over them.

Think of the thousands and children huddled in Central Park and on Riverside Park, in the open squares, in every shelter of shreds stretched into spaces. Think of men turning from the ruins of their homes to find women weeping over them. Think of soldiers everywhere. Think of transparent tracks of the New York Central laid from Forty-second street to the Battery, through the heart of this town, and wrecking every building and every block that stood of what all this would mean to you and you will have a faint idea of the great disaster in San Francisco.

The calamity is stupendous, appalling, and yet the people are not overwhelmed. Everything has been destroyed except that indomitable American spirit that survives all disaster. The spirit which will not be subdued. And that spirit is being already forgotten. The future is in every one's mind. The question is not how shall San Francisco be restored, but how shall it be made greater than it ever was, greater than it ever could have been, except for this fire.

There is already the rebirth of business activity. Everywhere buildings are being erected while plans are being prepared for a city of centres in the railroad shops in the Potrero. The workers are already beginning to carry on business in some of the private residences left standing to the east of Van Ness avenue. The business men are erecting stores on concrete foundations, while the single story buildings for every one of them are being built overhead. The restaurants are opening in the open air. Cafes are decorated by signs announcing that everything great and famous will reopen here as soon as buildings can be erected. Hotels are preparing to do business in some of the private residences left standing to the east of Van Ness avenue. The banks have established themselves in

For the Children

To succeed these days you must have plenty of grit, courage, strength. How is it with the children? Are they thin, pale, delicate? Do not forget Ayer's Sarsaparilla. You know it makes the blood pure and rich, and builds up the general health in every way.

The children cannot possibly have good health unless the bowels are in proper condition. Use Ayer's Pills. A dose at bedtime, sugar coated.

ENDOWING A BED

For Poor Consumptives of this County.

We have been pleased to note during the last week a movement is on foot to make some provision for the treatment of consumptives in this county and town, who cannot afford to pay their way at sanitariums. Mr. G. L. Jennings, Field Secretary of the Canadian Association for Consumptives, appeared before the Town Council on Monday evening, and gave a detailed account of how a bed is endowed from a city, town or county, or as in this case, jointly town and county, of the above, and from which it is to be finished by both the patient and locality by the payment of the admittance of an applicant.

The Town Council were asked for a grant of $100, and the County Council will be asked for $200. Only the $300 necessary for the endowment for the bed is required. The proposition was received very favorably by the members, but thought that as this matter affected the rural districts the proposition was too much in favor of the town. It was stated at the meeting was, that the Finance committee of the County were appointed a committee to wait upon the County Council and adjust with them the proportion that each should pay. We are glad to see people of this County will be pleased to learn of this movement, and will do what they know that between the two Councils and the generous people of the County there is enough to endow a bed for a patient from this county. Some few years already have passed since the Stove Hospital in Muskoka, and the generous response from the people of Ontario, showed how ready and willing they were to help the sick and afflicted. Consumption is a disease that is contagious, the patient is admitted, as a matter of special hospital, the question is, what can be done to help them? Is it not the best of help, and education that this matter offered us, and it is our duty to ourselves and our County to accept it. The expense would be nothing compared to the good to be derived.

—Shortly after twelve o'clock last Friday afternoon as the B.Q.R. to Deseronto was leaving the engine ran off the track a short distance from the station. The engine turned completely over on its side. The engineer and fireman saved themselves by jumping, but not before the engineer had his arm scalded by escaping steam. The cause was a defect at the switch. The track for a distance was torn up and the road blocked for a time. Fortunately no one was seriously injured. The wreckage was cleared away during the night by the company's employees and the damaged engine and tender put on flat cars and taken to the repair shops at Deseronto.

—The sacred concert given in the Western Methodist church, on the week day night, was one of the best musical treats ever given in Napanee. Tiers was a large and appreciative audience, and the seats were filled to overflowing in the encores. Miss Allyn Bateman has a voice of wonderful compass, her upper register notes being as clear as a bird's, and her lower notes lower than most sopranos can get, but very rich and full. Miss Mossy fully justified all that had been written of her as a soprano singer, as she responded three times. THE TERROR OF THE DESERT.

By a Banker.

A journey over the desert, even though it be the short route over a corner of the Libyan desert which connects Fez with Algiers, is generally anything but a monotony of the camel or the irritating jerk of the camel's head frequently traverse, is a weary and mono tonous experience, frequently rendered by considerable discomfort, and, except to those who cannot be absolute solitude, a most dreary and melancholy undertaking.

Leaving the fertile plains of the luxuriant Nile valley, they enter the broad stony graves of lofty palms, their graceful pendent fronds waving in and out in the breeze, and leaving all those numerous relics of the mighty past which for decades of centuries have withstood the ravaging hands of time, the traveller, after a few hours, finds himself in the midst of the eternal and unbending solitudes of the wilderness. On all sides sand; nothing visible but sand, sand, sand, not a shrub, not a tree, not a vestige of life, unless it be some loathsome bird of prey hovering above in the gloating hope of seeing a tired out camel or ass succumb. Here an extensive flat stretches with heavy sand to vary the monotony save here and there the skeleton of a camel left to perish in the desert. Here a lofty and impassable dune or mountain, rifted and blacker, ever nearer and nearer advances the elsewhere cloud, darkening the air and overspreading all in a dismal obscurity. And now, with a harsh, discordant wrider, it is upon us: a fierce, stifling and suffocating barricade of sharp, gritty sand; stabbing and pricking as with thousands of needles, were a pointed thorn; and rattling like hail upon us.

At length all is over; we remount our camels or asses, and at the sun sinks amidst angry, fiery clouds in the west we reach our destination, the palm groves and black-bedevilled roads of civilization.

And so with the storms of life; overwhelming us in a deluge of abuse, poignant beatings, and we drive ing us to flee for refuge from the stinging blasts. But those who take shelter beneath the Rock of Ages, who cleave by the aid of the Holy Spirit of God that the Saviour of the World bore their griefs, carried their sorrows, and suffered the chastisement due to them, and who commit themselves as supplicants at His feet, find that those storms pass harmlessly over them, and that their sorrows are exchanged for joyous gladness, and the silent jubilation.

SHOWERS OF BLESSING

DIVINE POWER FOR LIFE AND SERVICE STILL IS POSSIBLE.

PENTECOSTAL CONDITIONS

If These Be Fulfilled, Even Now Christians May "Be Endued With Power From on High" — What the Result Would Be in the World Graphically Set Forth by the Rev. Dr. Talmage.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Wm. Briggs, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 20.—That the divine power for life and service conferred on the disciples at Pentecost is still accessible to present day Christians and will be conferred on those who fulfill its conditions is the contention of the preacher in this sermon on the text, Luke xxiv, 49, "Until ye be endued with power from on high."

While I was pondering on this text like a flash this sentence rose to my lips: "How many men and women there are who have all the mighty elements for gospel power except the one fact that they are not developed! What service there might really be among evangelists if they would only follow the leadings of Jesus Christ and plead with him that they might be baptized with the power of the Holy Ghost." These men and women are like the disciples of Jesus Christ before the day of Pentecost. They believe in Jesus. In one sense they have been followers of Christ, but in another sense they have not had their souls fired with the living coals from off his altars. These men and women are in exactly the same position as was Dwight L. Moody during the first years of his ministry in the city of Chicago.

Let the shoe you what that condition was by reading D. L. Moody's experience in his own words: "When I was preaching in Farwell hall, in Chicago, I never worked harder to prepare my sermons than I did then. I preached and preached, but it was beating against the air. A good woman said to me, 'Mr. Moody, you don't seem to have power in your preaching.' My desire was that I might have a fresh anointing. I requested this woman and a few others to come and pray with me every Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Oh, how piteously I prayer that God might fill the empty vessel! After the fire in Chicago I was in New York city, and, going into the bank on Wall street, it seemed as if I felt a strange and mighty power coming over me. I went up to the hotel, and there in my room I wept before God and cried, 'O my God, stay thy hand!' He gave me such fullness that it seemed more than I could contain. A great tidal wave of love came as a boautiful way, but I do not know that I have preached a sermon since but God has given me some soul. Oh, I would not be back where I was four years ago for all the wealth of this world. If you could put it at my feet I would kick it away like a football. I seem a wonder to some of you, but I am a greater wonder to myself than to any one else. These are the very same sermons I preached in Chicago were for vetoed. It is not new sermons but the power of God. It is not a new gospel, but the old gospel with the Holy Ghost of power." This is the testimony of the greatest winner of souls in the evangelistic field of the last century.

Brethren, we desire this higher power. As ministers we want it. Some of us, like Mr. Moody, have spent the last ounce of energy in the preparation of sermons, but, like him, "we have been beating against the air." As Sunday school teachers, as members of the churches, we all want this higher power. How can we get the higher power of the gospel? I know of no better way to learn how to get it than to study the events of the days preceding the first Christian Pentecost, when the disciples, according to the command of Jesus Christ, tarried in Jerusalem until they were "endued with power from on high." O God, give to us the divine power of gospel life as thou didst give that power to thy disciples of old and art willing to give it to all disciples of the present day."

These disciples, in the first place, believed in a supernatural Saviour. They believed that he had power over human souls. He "was a watchmaker in general than a own watch and can make a watch and then take it apart and put it together again." They believed that Christ, who created the world and created life, could take that life away from a human body and then put that life back again into the same human body. They saw him raise Lazarus from the tomb. They believed that just as a shipbuilder could knock out a rotten plank from the hull of the boat he had once built and put a new plank in its place, so Jesus Christ, who had created the body, could put in a new eye in the place of a blind eye. He actually performed this miracle in the physical body again and again before their own eyes. They believed in his supreme power. Just as man can to-day take the currents of electricity which he has discovered and can send them over space a wire and store them up in an electric machine called an automobile they believed that this Christ, who is the supernatural Christ, could transmit his power into the lives of his disciples if he wished so to do. In other words, they looked upon Christ as a supernatural being, able to give supernatural gifts to those to whom he wished to give those gifts. Do you believe that Christ is a supernatural being and able to do this as the disciples of old believed it on the days preceding Pentecost?

"Well," you answer, "to tell the truth, I have not thought about it." You say, "I have not been worrying so much about what I believe as about what I do." You say: "Theorists never amount to much. It is the practical fellow who brings results to pass. I have not the time to think whether Christ is supernatural or not or whether he ever was supernatural power or not. I have been using up my time in service and not in theories." You are trying to obey the voice of God, who tells me to visit the sick and feed the hungry and be a guide for the blind. That is the life right. I do all the good I can to as many people as I can in as many different ways as I can." Brethren, let hair splitting theological questions alone. Whether Christ is divine or not, whether he can give to his disciples a supernatural gift, rarely enters my mind. To tell the truth, I do but little else than try to help my fellow men, and I guess God does not care much what I think about Christ as long as I do all I can to relieve my fellow men especially as I can." Ah, my friends, you are wrong. It does make a good deal of difference to you in your gospel work what you think about Christ. It does mean the difference between the possible higher power and the lower spiritual life.

"Faith without works is dead." But without faith in the divinity of Jesus Christ and in his supernatural power "works" in the shape of "deeds" are worse than dead. The lack of faith in Christ means that you are utterly devoid of the Christ power. The belief in Christ is the very foundation of the gospel. What would you think of an architect who laid a poor foundation for a mansion and shows you a beautiful temple which he has erected upon the sands? Oh, it is exquisite! It is a delight to come shining through the most expensive of glass windows. The altars are rich with gold and beautiful carvings. The floors are exquisite mosaics. The dome is a perfect dream. But what would you think if that architect, after he had taken you through that building, would reply to your every question by "How are the foundations of this beautiful structure? Are they strong and true?" "Oh, I did not bother myself on the foundations. Instead of digging them deep and strong, where all the work would be hidden from view, a man of man, I simply builded these walls upon the surface. I expended all my energies upon the superstructure." What would you think of a ship designer who did not lay the keel of his ship straight and true? Even on the day of the launching of that boat the hull would turn "turtle," or in the first great storm it would be swept under or go to pieces or sink with all on board. Now, it is not sufficient in the Christian life for us to say, "I am all right because I have visited the sick and fed the hungry and was eyes to the blind." It is not sufficient for the architect to say, "I am all right because I have worked hard and builded my superstructure grandly." It is not sufficient for the ship designer to talk about setting his masts before he has laid the keel well. The questions of the divinity of Christ and the divine power of Christ are the most vital questions in the gospel life. It is a foundation question. This question precedes all other questions. "Whom say ye that I am?" Jesus asked the disciples of old. Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." Do you answer thus? Do you believe thus? Do you believe in the supernatural power of Jesus as the disciples did when they gathered in Jerusalem to be endued with power from on high?

These disciples believed that Christ could give his supernatural power to his disciples if he would. They did more. They believed that Christ would give to them, as individuals, this supernatural power. They were not content to his divine commands and tarried still in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. Now, it is one fact to feel that Christ can give to others his power if he would or that he will give it to me individually his higher power if I am willing to obey his commands and do as he wishes me to do.

Oh, that is a crucial test of faith! It is not difficult for me to understand how God could give the highest power to a Moody or a Finney or a Wesley or a Peter or a James or a John or a Mary on the day of Pentecost, but that he will give to me this higher power if I obey his will—ah, me, that is hard to believe! And yet is not God keeping his promises with those who are mentally and physically no greater and no better than you or I? Some time ago I was riding out to the grave of a southern lady who had been a member of my church. Among the pallbearers was a gentleman who, with all his family, had been reared on the Old Carolina flood of a few years ago. I said "Tell me about it." Then he told me how the waters rose higher and higher. First they came to the top of the gates. Then they rose to the first floors. They grew higher and higher when the winds in an angry hurricane blew them in. Then the people were drowned, not by the hundreds, but by the thousands. The walls tottered. The houses were battered to places. Flying through the air went great beams. It was death overhead. It was death all around. It was death everywhere. The waters were so many that after the water had subsided they were piled into boats and taken out and dumped into the gulf stream. They were too many even to be buried.

"How did you feel during that awful tragedy?" I asked. "As calm as I do now," he replied. "I knew that in the face of this storm and flood no human arm could save me. Human help was beyond the question. It could do no good if it came. I could not swim. Besides that, I had in my house a wife and two little children and five or six old people who had come there for shelter. So when the storm was raging and flood I gathered them all together in an upper room. Then I said: 'Friends, the Bible tells us that if we come to God in believing prayer and ask of him anything we will he will grant us that request. Now, I believe God will save us if we ask him. Do you believe as I believe?' 'Yes,' they said. Then we all knelt and we all prayed. When I arose, I felt that God would save us. I never had a trouble about the result. He did save us. After awhile a roof came floating past. My aged negro servant caught it. He held it for a little while by the side of the house. I placed the whole family upon the roof. Then I climbed there myself. It was an awful night. No horror could be greater than those hours we passed through. Yet all through the night I kept saying: 'I believe. I believe. I believe he will save us. I believe.' And save us he did. Could you in a time of trouble make a believing prayer like that? Could you appropriate to yourself the promise as he did? Do you believe God will bless you as an individual if you obey his commandments the same as he blessed his people in the Galveston flood and blessed the disciples of old who tarried still in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high?

But these disciples of old did more than to simply believe that Christ would give to them the higher power if they would obey his commands. During the days preceding Pentecost, by prayer, by supplication and by consecration of their full lives to God, they put themselves into a proper condition to receive this power of the Holy Spirit. They not only threw themselves upon the divine love, but they prayed and kept on praying something like this: "O God, cleanse me from sin! O God, make me a clean vessel for the spirit life! O God, take all selfishness and meanness and worldliness out of my life! O God, make me a holy and prayerful and plan and work only for thee!" Is not that your idea of how the disciples of old passed the days in Jerusalem preceding the moment when the power of the Holy Spirit came upon them in tongues of fire? If you and I would only do as those disciples of old did and come with such prayers and pleadings upon our lips, do you not believe that Christ would also endue us with power from on high?

Come, let me take you to the upper chamber in Jerusalem. It is the year of A. D. It is about the 1st of June or the beginning of summer. All the hillsides about Jerusalem are covered with flowers. As we come to this upper chamber, which was supposed to belong to the Evangelist Mark, who was one of the biographers of Jesus, we find that these disciples had been holding there for nearly ten days. Whenever since the ascension, I hear a woman's sweet voice lifted in prayer, it is the voice of Mary, the mother of Christ. The voice goes something like this: "O Lord Jesus, I cared for thee when thou were a child. I, the mother, but thou art my Lord. Send thy spirit into our midst. Come quickly with thy power. Come and cleanse us from all sin." Then as the prayer died away in pleading sobs methinks I hear a voice starting a song or it sometimes hear in a Methodist gathering, but instead of a Methodist hymn the voice leads into little gatherings through the noble melodies of the grand old Twenty-third psalm of David, which is a prayer and a song. And as the climax is reached a strange spiritual influence sweeps over the room when the voices chant that last grand verse, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

Then for a little while silence reigns. Why, it is so still that you can almost hear each heart beat. Then another voice begins to pray. The disciples of brethren, why did I deny him? Why did I desert him at the saddest moment of his life? I can see now as in visions his great loving eyes upon me. I denied him not only once, but twice and thrice. But, though he could not see or remind me, he never reproached me. He surely forgives if we come and ask his forgiveness." Then another silence. Then a searching of the Scriptures. Then a sobbing voice says: "I am Thomas, the doubter. But he forgives me, even me." Then the prayer and the supplications and the confessions go on. But on the tenth day, when they were still praying, suddenly each man and woman and child turned toward the others and cried: "Look! Look! See the flame! It is the manifestation of the Holy Spirit." And, my friends, if we come to God in believing that he would bless us if we asked him and if we would only keep on and pray and agonize and consecrate ourselves to his service as the disciples of old did on the day of Pentecost, would not believe Christ would give to us the higher power of gospel life? He will. You not therefore here and now start forth to seek your Pentecost and begin to plead and to consecrate your whole life to the Master's service?

But I cannot close without just one thought more. This baptism of the power of the Holy Spirit came to the disciples of old in the days when they felt their greatest need of the promised Comforter or supernatural power. The crucifixion was over. Yes. The ascension had taken place. Yes. Ten day less than two weeks before suddenly Christ had again departed. Up until the Monday of ascension he went higher and higher until his body disappears behind the clouds; higher and higher until he finally passed out of sight. Then the disciples realized their loneliness and helplessness! Christ gone, the higher power. You need it now. Last Sunday as a preacher you delivered a sermon which was in a literary sense a humble gem. But after you finished you knew as a messenger of Christ that it rang false all through. You need this power in the home. In your own strength you cannot rear your children as you feel God. Deep in that we are going to refuse longer to seek this power of the higher spiritual life. It is said that on March 14, 1906, the British steamer Pheonix foundered at sea off the banks of Newfoundland on account of all on board were lost because its hull was battered to pieces by the barrels and heavy fixtures which were torn from the ship's deck and then by the waves hurled against the ship's sides, until under these battering rams the ship went down. My Lord and my God, shall we be eternally battered to pieces for the lack of power we continue to refuse to seek thy higher power? Shall we not seek this high power as on the disciples of old did at Pentecost? Shall these continued refusals to seek that higher power destroy us as the derelict debris of the British steamer destroyed her off the Newfoundland banks? Listen, friend. Listen and answer to this vital question: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"

A Heroic Recipe.

A young woman, one of many, who is deeply afflicted with a sinless and mad desire to become an actress, once called on the late Lester Wallack and requested his assistance in getting on the stage. The most debonair of actor-managers looked at her in his own quiet, comely way and asked:

"Are you married?"

"No," replied the aspirant.

"My dear young lady," said Mr. Wallack, "go and get married, have two or three children, lose them, be deserted by your husband, get a divorce and then come back and try to act."

The Real "Little Breeches."

The hero of John Hay's celebrated poem, "Little Breeches," is a son of Solomon Tucker, of New Virginia, Iowa, and is now living near Letts, Iowa, a husky farmer. Laren Talbott, of Letts City, a cousin, recalls the incident upon which the poem was based, and tells about it as follows: "The cousin was about 4 years old when he broke into fame. Van Scoy and Virginia one day, and when he got out of the wagon for a minute the horses started away with the boy in the wagon. The horses went over ditches, fences and brush piles. Finally the horses overturned, and the little fellow was thrown head first into a drove of sheep. The father and friends, running frantically in an effort to catch the runaways, saw the accident and rushed to the rescue, only to find the little fellow dead, but on the approach of his father the boy sat up and said: 'Dad, give me a chaw of terbacker.' That was the incident which prompted John Hay to write his famous verse."

An Ungallant Lawyer.

An Indiana lawyer named Gill in his speech in a recent breach of promise case made some epigrammatic comments about women which will not make him popular with the sex. However, he was counsel for the defendant in the case. He said: "All women have a capacity for describing themselves as martyrs. They regard any other woman that is pretty knows as a 'creature.' The first thing a woman did when she was engaged was to take the man around in triumph and show him to her friends."

It was Dick's turn to read his composition in school. He arose, and stood up in front of his teacher's desk, and after making a low bow unrolled a sheet of foolscap and began:

"Cows is——"

"Cows is a very useful animal, boys and girls, but as for you," "Give me liberty or give me death."

"Dear Sur.—Wood like to eat you for yore dorter's hund in marage. Me and she are in luv and I think we'd make a wife. Yures, Henry."

The farmer grabbed a postal card and immediately wrote the following reply:

"Mistress—Well, why don't you boil the eggs?

An Englishman was driving through Dublin with a bosom friend, and as far as so was expatiating on the merits of his charger's stout. "You're very fortunate to have such beer to drink," said the friend. "For 'im told I've food and drink in one." "Aye, bedad, so it is, sure," responded the Irishman, "and a blessed mercy it was, well if you only take enough of it."

"What is the result," asked a teacher of the weary class in arithmetic, "when you put two and two together?"

STRAINED BACK AND SIDE.

"While working in a saw mill," writes Mr. Kenney from Bristol, "I strained my back and side so severely I had to go to bed. Every one around me thought I was a cripple for life. I tried different oils and liniments, but wasn't relieved until I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. The first application gave considerable relief, and by the time I had used a half box. Other men in the mill use Nerviline with tremendous benefit too. An honest record of nearly fifty years has established the value of Polson's Nerviline.

ENSNARING VICTIMS.

STEPS SHOULD BE TAKEN AT ONCE TO PREVENT FURTHER TROUBLE.

Here in Napanee, as in other cities and towns, dyspepsia in some of its troubles are ensnaring victims in a most insidious way.

Nearly every mother's son of us and daughter, too, expects the stomach to accustom itself to all manner of ill-treatment, but the time comes when we cannot abuse it with impunity. How much better it would be to take steps at once to strengthen the stomach and prevent further trouble.

Use Mi-o-na now and soothe the irritated walls of the stomach, and strengthen the gastric follicles so that they will pour out their daily supply of digestive materials with regularity. Then the headaches, sleeplessness, specks before the eyes, poor appetite, dread feelings and nervousness will disappear, and you can eat what you want at any time you like.

Mi-o-na is a combination of remedies, some of which are but little known in this country, and is a positive guaranteed cure for all diseases of the stomach excepting cancer.

Just one little tablet out of a 50 cent box before meals, for a few days, and you will soon regain perfect health and strength, and have no fear of indigestion or stomach trouble.

There is a remedy in Ferrozone—that quickly lifts that half dead feeling. Guaranteed, but Ferrozone makes you feel good; it sharpens the appetite, makes it keen as a razor.

Blood? Ferrozone makes lots of it, the rich nourishing kind that vitalizes the whole body. You'll be delightfully quickened, immensely strengthened, feel hearty and vigorous after using Ferrozone. WALNUT GROVE.

Quite a serious accident happened at Mr. D. Thompson's farm. His little son Axel was driving a team of colts down the lane to the road, when the colts became frightened and slipped ahead, striking the horses and causing them to run away. The little fellow held to the team bravely until he was thrown by the horses' heels. Then they gave a sudden spring, throwing him off, and then dashed down. They were fence at Mr. Wilson Buck's well, where one of the horses got caught, stopping the other by running against him. Miss Thompson hurried out and held the team until her cousin Andrew came to her assistance, and got them free from the wire. As soon as the little boy was able to get on his feet, he went to see where his horses were, and we are pleased to say neither team nor boy was hurt more than a few scratches and bruises.

Mrs. Joel Thompson is spending a few days with her daughter, Mrs. F. Slote.

COMMUNICATIONS

From J. S. Robertson, Secretary, Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives, asking for a grant towards that institution. Laid on table.

Mr. G. L. Benning, representing the above institution, was present, and heard. He asked that the Town Council grant $100.00, and he would also ask the County Council to grant the sum of $200.00. It would surely be demand towards a worthy cause, and would greatly help towards the maintenance of this institution. He was also forming a branch association and had met several ladies and gentlemen from Napanee and vicinity who were in sympathy with the movement.

Mr. F. Burrows was also heard, and was much in sympathy with this institution. He thought we all should consider this very worthy cause, and hoped the Board would be able to see their way clear to assist in the matter.

Moved by Councillor Kimmerly, seconded by Councillor Bowerman, that the matter be referred to the Finance committee to confer with the members of the County Council, with power to act in this matter.

From Aylen-Chalmers Co., Montreal, stating that they would draw on the Corporation for the first and second installments of their contract, about $3,600, for generators, etc., on the 21st June.

On motion the amount asked for was granted.

From The Robb Engineering Co., asking as to when the engine, boilers, etc., would be ready, so that they could ship their machinery and boilers.

WILL WONDERS EVER CEASE?

"Wait a minute" she said to her husband, "let us see what all this excitement is about." A large crowd had gathered in front of Fred. L. Hooper's Drug Store window. All were looking at a lady standing in the window combing her long and beautiful hair. She was one of the demonstrators for the Seven Sutherland Sisters.

ST. ALBAN'S CHURCH, ODESSA.

This church being now free from debt is to be consecrated by the Bishop of Ontario on Saturday morning, June 2d. A large number of visiting clergy are expected to be present, including Rural Dean Quartermaine, the original incumbent. The bishop and clergy will be conveyed by carriages from Napanee, and after the service of consecration will be entertained at luncheon by the ladies of the congregation. The church property has been increased by a neat lawn fence at a cost of $75. The credit of this is large ly due to R. Bennett, churchwarden, who collected the necessary money before undertaking the work.

A SUCCESS.

The ferry across Hay Bay at No. 3, was in operation all last week, and was well patronized. Some alterations were made in the road paving, which make the speed of the boat much faster, and heavier horses have been put to work the roads. The people of South Fredericksburgh and Adolphustown, who have used the ferry are pleased with it, the trip across, unless the wind is heavy from the west, being made in eight minutes. The boat is staunch and roomy, and will accommodate a large amount of travel. Capt. Wm. Loyst and his assistant, Wilfrid Holden, are courteous, capable and obliging.

NOT IF AS RICH AS ROCKEFELLER

If you had all the wealth of Rockefeller, the Standard Oil magnate, you could not buy a better medicine for bowel complaints than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. The most eminent physicians can not prescribe a better preparation for old and children, both for children and adults. The uniform success of this remedy has shown it to be superior to all others. It never fails, and when reduced with water and sweetened, is pleasant to take. Every family should be supplied with it. Sold at The Red Cross Drug Store. 18d

They Hit Spot.

The Seat of Women's Troubles.

When you get all run-down, feel tired and you get out of bed on wrong side, it is pretty hard to tell just what part of your peculiar organism is going wrong, isn't it? That is why you can take so much medicine and still have it do you so little good.

It doesn't hit the right spot, that is. It doesn't reach the organ or organs that are going wrong.

But supposing you could get a remedy that contains ingredients for every organ of your system, and especially those peculiar to your sex, you wouldn't need, then, to know just what is the matter with you, or just what organ is causing the trouble, would you?

Certainly not, because no matter which organ or organs it might be, they would be reached by some one of the many ingredients of the medicine, and would be restored to a normal condition. And then you would be well again.

And do you know there IS one just such remedy? It is

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women.

Dr. Hugo's remedy contains something for every organ of the female system; something for the stomach to help indigestion—for the bowels to cure constipation—for the nervous system to tone up the nerves—for the liver and kidneys to make them active in carrying off impurities—something for the uterine system to stop drains, allay inflammation and make women regular.

If there is anything wrong with you—if you don't feel as well as you used, to—these tablets will give you the old time life and vigor.

Don't wait till something serious develops. Take them now.

Tragedy Near Sydenham

YOUNG MAN SHOT HIS WIFE AND FATHER-IN-LAW, AND THEN KILLED HIMSELF.

One of the most frightful tragedies in the history of the county of Frontenac occurred two miles beyond the village of Sydenham, at 11 o'clock last Saturday morning. John Joyce, aged thirty-three, an English emigrant, and for about five years in this country three years locally, shot his wife in the breast, seriously shot his father-in-law in the shoulder, and then committed suicide by shooting a bullet through his brain, thirty feet of the scene of the tragedy by cutting his throat.

The tragedy disclosed a horrible mode of life. Cornelius Wood, a wounded father, formerly lived near Wilmur, where he was tarred and feathered for a crime against his own daughter. He was tried in Kingston, before Judge Wilkison, and sent to penitentiary for five years. Last fall Wood was released from prison and settled in the old but near Harlem.

Joyce's wife is only about twenty years of age, and her reputation is not without blemish. Joyce knew this, but in spite of friendly advice married the girl on January 4th last. The couple got on well for a time till the girl's father and brothers and Ell Smith, an associate of the family, began to coax her away from her husband to another life.

On Thursday evening one of the sons, Noah, came home by stage from Kingston and stopped at Joyce's small house on the farm of Wilbert Wood's to see his sister. Though she and Joyce had been seen in loving embrace that afternoon, on the night later she was yearning to join her brother Noah. Next day Joyce went in town work to find that Ell Smith and Noah had been for a time till they took away his wife and her few goods.

DEMANDED HER RETURN.

It became that Joyce went on the house of his father-in-law about 7 o'clock Saturday morning and meeting him in front of the door demanded his wife. The father refused to allow her to return. Crowded to desperation Joyce went to an adjoining field, where he had left a loaded rifle borrowed from a neighbor on some pretext, and coming back deliberately fired at his father-in-law, but the rifle missed fire. He reloaded, and shot Wood in the shoulder as he started to run away. The old man dropped to the ground, and Joyce started for the road, twenty feet off, in which his wife and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Angus Wood, had barricaded the door. Here broke these very quickly and also the inner bedroom door, and, although his wife pleaded with him not to shoot, he shot her with the last bullet he had and she dropped near the door.

Apparently Joyce had deliberately planned what he intended to do, for he made no attempt to harm Mrs. Angus Wood, who was shrieking. He then went out and wandered a little from the house. In the meantime the other women slipped out and ran to a neighbor for help.

Joyce, it is thought, went inside again and nursing his wife dying, returned to the open and cut his throat from ear to ear in a deliberate way.

CORONER BEGINS INQUIRY.

Last night Coroner Mundell visited the scene, and swore in a jury to inquire into Joyce's death. The inquest was adjourned till Monday afternoon. There were rumors that a body knife, found near the house, might have been used by someone in killing Joyce after the shooting, but there was no particle of evidence to establish anything of the kind.

Dr. Mundell found that Mrs. Joyce had been shot through the body in line with the top of the liver and the lower edge of the lung. He thought that the bullet which her father received in the shoulder had glanced downward and gone through the right lung. Both are likely to die. They were too dangerously wounded to risk movement to the hospital in Kingston.

JOYCE NOT MENTALLY PERFECT.

Joyce's employer, William McAuley, trusted him with the care of his house while he was away, and found him a reliable assistant and hard worker. He was not mentally perfect and his wife was flighty. Joyce, who was thirty-three years of age, came from the old country, and lived with Bernard Mullin and Michael Brady, Scrangeon. He was then with McAuley for a year and a half. His ranch was good for labor, but he gave his wife a good living, better than she had received at home. All was right save some disagreements in Dalowny.

Among the residents there is no sympathy for the Wood family. For Joyce, the young man who did the shooting, sorrow is expressed.

Kingston, May 28—Mrs. Joyce, one of the Sydenham shooting victims, died on Sunday morning. Coroner Herjer, which meets again at two o'clock this afternoon, will hold an inquest over her remains.

Cornelius Wood, the girl's father, was brought to the Kingston General Hospital last night, and is resting easy, though dangerously wounded.

The body of Joyce, the murderer and suicide, still lies unburied until after the inquest concludes this afternoon.

HER DYING STATEMENT.

In her ante-mortem deposition to Coroner Mundell, Mrs. Joyce declared that she had left her husband because she had "insulted her" on Thursday, as he had done the week before. He came to her father's house early that morning raging mad and her father had gone to take the gun away. After the shooting of her father and she in the bedroom for safety, but her husband forced the door, they came out to plead for her life, but he shot her in the large room. She knew more or less of the circumstances, because she was unconscious. Her mind recurred during her statement to the scene in the dining room, the crowded to the bedroom and up to the time she was paid. No one was present at the shooting but Ella May Wood, wife of Angus Wood, her brother, besides the children. Wallie and Mabel. Mrs. Joyce did not know any evidence of the hard life and profanities attributed to the Wood family. It was possessing all and bolokined not to speak 20 years ago.

CHILDHOOD AILMENTS.

Most of the troubles that afflict little ones may be traced to the stomach or bowels and if these are put right the child will get well and thrive well. Baby's Own Tablets will cure all stomach and bowel ailments and all the minor troubles of babyhood and childhood. And the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that this medicine contains no poisonous opiate or harmful drug. Mrs. Wilbert McKenzie, Cromarty, says:—"Our baby girl was troubled with obstinate constipation to such an extent that we did not think she would live. She ceased almost to nurse and was wasting away. We got a box of Baby's Own Tablets, and in three days found a great improvement. I continued giving her the Tablets for nearly a month, and every trace of trouble has disappeared, and she has since been a bright, healthy child and has grown nicely. You can get the Tablets from any medicine dealer or by mail at 25 cents a box, writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A MOVEMENT OF FINANCIAL INTEREST TO NAPANEE.

Many of our readers who may not take particular interest in sporting men, in the better protection of our fish and game, will be specially interested did they understand the seriously important movement afoot of this problem.

Briefly, they may fairly assume that it is good policy to conserve the well-being of the masses, before that of a very small section of the community. For, contrary to popular belief, in many years the practice of the bepartmental men in Toronto and Ottawa, who control the Game and Fish Regulations for the Province of Ontario.

Owing to the rapidity and lack of forethought on the part of the net fisherman on the Bay of Quinte, and the Trent Valley, the whitefish and salmon trout have been almost entirely exterminated, the most delicious of fresh water food fish, the Lake Ontario Quinte Ouanda, the salmon trout fish, the angling is comparatively speaking, poor at present.

The commercial interest the public generally have in this subject, is that good angling provides an attraction to the country, and a sporting country visiting good sport will receive through the money spent by visitors, considerable wealth.

Statistics culled from the annual document issued by the State of Maine, show that in 1903, some fourteen millions of money was spent in that and left by visitors attracted almost entirely by the excellent angling to be spent provided, and it must be remembered that in those years the fish were there were practically but few fish in the Inland waters, only one small herd of deer, and no moose whatever. Now over 20,000 deer and 2,000 moose were killed in the State and good fishing was awarded for over 150,000 visitors, besides the residents of the State. This is an object lesson in what the proper protection of fish and game will do for a country.

This all attention, with much pleasure to a meeting to be held in the Council Chamber, Napanee Hall, on Saturday, June 2nd, at 2.30 p.m., for the purpose of forming a branch of the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association, as this body is doing good work in awakening public opinion to the importance objects it has so much at heart.

This will break up the croup, relieve the tightness and pain without trouble. Nerviline cures coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, hoarseness, etc. Nerviline is the family remedy in Canada. Get a 25c bottle of Nerviline. Try a 25c bottle of Nerviline.

The only nourishment that bread affords is that which the flour contains.

Bread baking is merely putting flour in appetising form.

Flour making is merely putting the nutritious part of wheat in shape for bread making.

Good milling is the kind that takes from the wheat all that is nutritious, nothing else.

Royal Household Flour

is made from carefully selected Manitoba Hard spring wheat.

Every pound is almost a pound of food; clean, white, pure and nutritious.

It goes farther, does better baking and is more satisfactory in every way than any other flour.

A WONDERFUL POTATO

MOST ENORMOUS CROPPER. PERFECTLY BLIGHT PROOF.

Double the crop off the same ground, and every one a sound one. Introduced in England in 1903 at $100 per 14 lbs.; three months later its blight proof and enormous cropping features caused the greatest sensation, resulting in record prices of all time, as high as $1250 per lb., being paid, and $250 for dinner.

"Even so recently as September last, when Mr. G. Massey sold 14 lbs., of Eldorado for $40 ($100) people were amazed and incredulous; yet three months later the same gentleman received a cheque for $1,400 ($3500) for 2 1-2 lbs. of the same variety." —Free Press, (England) Jan. 19, 1906.

"The yield of the Eldorado potato, the kind that brought the record price, is reported to run from 150 to 300 lbs., from one lb., of seed tubers."—Rural New Yorker, New York, Jan. 14, 1906.

Introduced here by us in 1905, at $16 per lb. Eldorado is repeating on a smaller scale the sensation it created in England, making the record prices of all time for the U. S. and Canada. A great many sales of 50 to 100 lbs. made to the leading seed potato growers, Experimental Farms, etc., in Canada and the U. S. These are aware of the history of the truly wonderful potato,

One lb. planted now, within two years will yield enough to plant all the acreage you want. Every lb. planted now is worth $20. Plant now, next year sell seed to your friends.

The Gentle Kidney Cure.

Don't think that Bu-Ju is not effective because it does not "tear things loose." The man, who talks most, don't beat. Kidney remedies that force and over-stimulate the kidneys do not treat the stomach, as Bu-Ju does to do you mighty little good.

Bu-Ju

goes about curing you gently, mildly, correctly. You never know you are taking medicine except that you begin to get better, and keep on getting better. Bu-Ju heals inflammation in the kidneys and takes away that sharp pain in the back and the dull ache through the hips, dangerous urination—and enables the worn out portions of the kidneys to heal and strengthen.

The BRETHREN

By Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," etc. Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

"Then I command that the rogue named Nicholas shall not be allowed to approach me. Is it to be borne that I must associate with my father's murderer?"

"I fear that in that business we all had a hand, nevertheless your order shall be obeyed. To tell you the truth, lady, I hate the fellow, who is but a common spy."

"I desire also," went on Rosamund, "to speak no more with Sir Hugh Lezelle."

"That is more difficult," said Hasan, "since he is the captain whom my master ordered me to obey in all things that have to do with the ship."

"I have nothing to do with the ship," answered Rosamund; "and surely the princess of Baalbec, if so I am, may choose her own companions. I wish to see more of you and less of Sir Hugh Lezelle."

"I am honored," replied Hassan, "and will do my best."

For some days after this, although he was always watching her, Lezelle approached Rosamund but seldom, and whenever he did so he found Hasan at her side, or rather standing behind her like a shadow.

At length, as it chanced, the prince was taken with a sickness from drinking bad water, and was forced to keep his bed for some days, and then Lezelle found an opportunity. Rosamund strove to keep her anklin to herself, but the heat of the summer sun in the Mediterranean drove her out of it to a place beneath an awning on the poop, where she sat with the woman Marie. Here Lezelle approached her, pretending to hang for shelter to inquire after her comfort, but she would answer him nothing. At length, since Marie could understand what he said to her in French, he addressed her in Arabic, which he spoke well, for he had feigned not to understand him. Then he used the English tongue as it was talked among the common people in Essex, and said:

"Lady, how sorely you misjudge me. What is my crime against you? I am an Essex man of good lineage, who met you in Essex and learnt to love you there. Is that a crime, in one who is not poor, who, moreover, was knighted for his deeds by no mean hand. Your father said me nay, and you make me nay, and, stung by my disappointment and his words—for he called me sea-thief and raked up old tales that are not true against me—I talked as I should not have done, swearing that I would wed you yet in spite of all. For this I was called to account with better, far better men than I, the noble knight Godwin, who was then a squire, struck me in the face. Well, he wronged and wounded me, and I forgave him, and I departed with my vessel to the East, for that is my business, to trade between Syria and the west.

"Now, as it chanced, there being peace at the time between the Sultan and the Christians, I visited Damascus to buy merchandise. Whilst I was there Saladin sent for me and asked if it were true on that I belonged to a part of England called Essex. When I answered yes, he asked if I knew Sir Andrew D'Arcy and his daughter. Again I said yes, whereon he told me that strange tale of your having to him, of which I had already heard; also a still stranger tale of some dream that he had dreamed concerning you, which made it necessary that you should be brought to his court, where he was minded to raise you to great honor. In the end, he offered to hire my finest ship for a large sum, if I would sail it to England to fetch you; but he did not tell me that any force was to be used, and I, on my part, said that I would lift no hand against you or your father, nor indeed have I done so."

"Who remembered the swords of Godwin and Wulf," broke in Rosamund scornfully, "and knew not that that braver-men should face them."

"Lady," answered Lezelle, coloring, "thither you have misjudged me for lack of courage. Of your courtesy, listen. I pray you. I did wrong to enter on this business, swearing that I did so for you that drove me to it, for the thought of this long voyage in your company was a bait I could not withstand."

"Paynim gold was the bait you could not withstand—and the sin," she said. Be brief, I pray you, I weary of this talk."

"Lady, you are harsh and misjudge me, as I will show," and he looked about him cautiously, "Within a week from now, if all goes well, I cast my anchor at Limasol in Cyprus, to take in food and water before we run to a secret port now arranged, whence you are to be taken overland to Damascus, avoiding all cities of the Franks. Now, the present ruler of Cyprus is my friend, and over him Saladin has now power. Once in his court, you would be safe until such time as you found opportunity to return to England. This, then, is my plan—that you should escape from the ship at night as I can arrange."

"And what is your payment," she asked, "who are a merchant knight?"

"My payment, lady, is—yourself. In Cyprus you will be wed—oh! there before you answer. At Damascus many dangers await you; with me you will find safety and a Christian husband who loves you well—so well that for your sake he is willing to lose his ship and, what is more, to break faith with Saladin, whose arm is long."

"Have done," she said coldly. "Sooner will I trust myself to an honest Saracen than to you, Sir Hugh, whose spurs, if you met your desert, should be hacked from your heels by scullions. Yes, sooner would I take death for my lord than you, who for your own base ends devised the plot that brought my father to his murder and me to slavery. Have done, I say, and never dare to speak of love to me," and rising, she walked past him to her cabin.

But Lezelle looking after her muttered to himself: "Fool, fool! You have but begun; nor will I forget your bitter words, for which you shall pay the merchant knight in blame."

From her cabin Rosamund sent a message to Hassan, saying that she would speak with him.

He came, still pale with illness, and asked her will, whereupon she told him what had passed between Lezelle and herself, demanding his protection against this man. Hassan's eyes flashed.

"Yonder he stands," he said, "alone. Will you come with me and speak to him?"

She bowed her head, and giving her his hand, led her to the poop.

"Sir captain," he began, addressing Lezelle, "the Princess here tells me a strange story—that you have dared to offer your love to her, by Allah! to her, a niece of Saiah-ed-din."

"What of it, Sir Saracen?" answered Lezelle, insolently. "Is not a Christian knight fit mate for the blood of an Eastern chief? Had I offered her less than marriage, you might have spoken."

"You!" answered Hassan, with rage in his low voice, "you, huckstering thief and renegade, who swear by Mahomet in Damascus and by your prophet Jesus in England—sy, deny it not, I have heard you, as I have heard that rogue, Nicholas, your servant. You, her fit mate? Why, were it not that you must guide this ship, and that my master bade me not to quarrel with you till your task is done, I would behead you now and cut from your throat the tongue that dared to speak such words; and he spoke he gripped the handle of his scimitar.

Lezelle quailed before his fierce eyes, for well he knew Hassan, and knew also that if it came to fighting his sailors were no match for the emir and his picked Saracens.

"When our duty is done you shall answer for those words," he said, trying to look brave.

"By Allah! I hold you to the promise," replied Hassan, "and Saladin-ed-din I will answer for them when and where you will, as you shall answer to him for your treachery."

"Of what, then, am I accused?" asked Lezelle. "Of loving the lady Rosamund, as do all strangers who come to quire after her comfort, but she would answer him nothing. At length, since Marie could understand what he said in French, he addressed her in Arabic, which he spoke well, for he had feigned not to understand him. Then he used the English tongue as it was talked among the common people in Essex, and said:

GOOD FOR GUELPH.

Galt Reporter.

Let some of the towns pay respectful consultin incurring from publication of the Ontario Bureau of Industries' report that at least take off their hats to Guelph. After reading the following statement:

The quarterly report of the Royal City's Light and Power service shows a total sale of 1,000,000 kilowatts of 14,072, and $8,998 on the electric branch of the service for the quarter, and $12,516, and for arm months slightly over 2,000,000. The effect of decreased charges for gas is partially mentioned. Following the reduction in rates for gas the demand has increased 272,500 feet, and an extra $19,000 will pass into the city's coffers. This increase has more than offset the reduction made, and operating expenses were only $72.66 more.

Some weeks ago there was a city appearance and invites the criticism of the ratepayers, pleased with the idea that only by private hands can public utilities be handled to the complete satisfaction of the people.

OBITUARY.

R. B. HOPE.

Robert Baldwin Hope was born at Newburgh, 24th March, 1841. A few months previously his father and family had moved from Bath to Newburgh, where Mr. Hope has resided ever since. For years he was a member of Newburgh Board of Education; three years Village and Municipal Council. Throughout nearly the whole term last past, Mr. Hope attended the village postoffice with inward-enduring fidelity, appreciated by the public. Last September his throat began to give him trouble; before Xmas the doctors expressed apprehension; early in the new year the members of the family were appalled by the whispered words, "Cancer in the throat." During five months all that was possible was done, while the devoted victim, enduring agony with all a brave man's fortitude, sank slowly down to inevitable death. In the afternoon of 24th May, from sheer weakness and exhaustion, and without any struggle whatever, the heart ceased to throb.

On Sunday, 27th, a large and distinguished concourse of Freemasons, Foresters, friends and relatives, assembled at the funeral, for Mr. Hope was widely known, and everywhere held in high esteem. To his widow and children have been extended the sincere sympathy of a whole community—folks from little to just beginning to go to school, and from old men to middle-aged.

Mr. Hope was the daughter of the late Allan McDonell, Watertown, his sisters being Mrs. Percy, Mrs. Black, Mrs. Allan Mowat, Mrs. Wood, of California. Her son, William Allan Hope, of the family name, is in public life state, in the city of San Jose. To the sincere sympathy of a whole community—folks from little to just beginning to go to school, and from old men to middle-aged.

Men's Suits and Overcoats, Seasonable Weights.

If your figure is out of plum in any way, get your suit made to order, built around your figure. But otherwise our fine ready-to-wear clothing fits as though made to order, and the materials and making would cost you five to ten dollars more than our price. The "insides" of the better suits are made of soft linen canvas, haircloth (the real kind not the imitation) and padding, all needle moulded into proper shape and placed in each garment by tailors who do absolutely nothing else but the hand work around the collar and shoulders. Result is a beautiful fitting stylish suit.

Outing Suits

With every summer season comes on increasing demand for Outing Suits. We have a full stock of these in single and double breasted styles made up of homespuns and Irish tweeds. Every coat is made to keep its shape in the 10.00 and 12.50 lines. Of course the cheaper ones at 5.00 and 7.50 will not hold their shape as long, but they are well made.

Boys' Furnishings

There are right sorts of shirts, neckwear and other furnishings for boys. And the right place to get them is the store that takes most pains to have them right—Robinson's.

75c for soft bosom shirts, made from same goods as men's dollar ones. 50c for a beautiful cream outing shirt. 5c for bow tie. 39c to 75c for shirt waists. 25c for string ties of 50c silks. Suspenders, 10c to 25c.

MENS' STRAW HATS.

Next fall will tell who served men best—and served most of them—with straw hats. We have the business so far. The soft straw hat is to be the vogue. There will be sailors worn but only by those for whom they are particularly adapted. The soft straw hat is more comfortable and will be worn more than any other. Men's Straw Hat prices are from 25c up to 3.00. Linen hats at 50c and 75c each.

SHIRT NEWS FOR MEN—DON'T MISS IT.

"What style of shirts shall I buy, light or dark effects?" Lots of men ask that question in one form or another. Just one answer: Please yourself. No hard and fast rule, so it's a negligee shirt, light or dark or in between, pleated bosom or plain, cuffs attached or separate. And the stocks here admit of choice to suit any good taste. 50c, 75c, 1.00, 1.25, and 1.50. Better still we have certain well bought lots of Negligee Shirts at less than regular prices.

On Saturday a confirmation and consecration service will be held in the Anglican church of this place. Besides the Bishop, a number of clergymen from different points will be in attendance. At the conclusion of the service refreshments will be given in R. Toomey's hall. We like the rule of the church; a new piece of worship is never consecrated until it is free from debt. Another commendable thing is that nothing in all the line of tenements, shows or concerts, is permitted in the precincts of the sacred edifice, but that is given to God as His own place in which to be worshipped. Would that all churches were prohibited from all things save for that which they are consecrated. We think whether wrongly or not that having such things in the church as we have mentioned tends to irreverence and as that is one of the great sins of the age in church and home we should do all in our power to overcome it by precept and example.

JUNE CANADIAN MAGAZINE

The June Canadian Magazine is embellished with photographs and drawings of the San Francisco fire and with pictures of Prince Arthur's visit to Canada. Professor Cappon's article on "Earthquakes and Volcanic Eruptions" is extremely interesting and scholarly and attracts attention just at this time. Frederick Dolman's article on Sir John Millais' art and art methods is well illustrated and worthy of special mention. Frank Carrel's illustrated article on "An Experience in Tangier" is very readable. Mr. Webber's second article on "The New York Season of Drama," with its illustrations, forms an excellent feature. The Stories by Nellie L. McClung, W. A. Fraser, and Herman Whitaker are exceptionally good. Arnold Haultain takes the government to task in an article entitled "Tariff and the Tariff," which is calculated to upset the duty on sculptures. Mr. McCready continues his story of the early days of the Federal Government.

A GIRL'S TWENTY DOLLAR SALARY.

"After all is said and done, twenty dollars a week is no mean competence for an independent woman," says Miss Harriet Martin, writing in the New York Woman's Magazine for June on "Spending a Twenty Dollar Salary." She goes on to show what may be done and how a girl may live on this amount. Her first girl is starting from the beginning and spends $130 on furniture out of her yearly one thousand and forty dollars. She has $100 on deposit and used $250 on rent, $25 on amusements and $100 on accidentals, and saves the remainder, $145. Miss Martin's avowed readers who themselves earn twenty dollars a week or more will doubtless differ greatly in opinion as to the fundamental rectitude of this division. As for those who earn less than this amount, they will doubtless declare that here is no problem at all—that the crux of the question arises when food, rent, clothing and incidentals have to be met out of a weekly salary of $15, $10, or even less.

MEMORIAL DAY SERMON

MARKS LINE BETWEEN TRUE AND FALSE HEROISM.

ADVICE TO THE OLD SOLDIERS

Rev. Dr. Talmage Utters a Discriminating Eulogy—Speaks the Truth and Fears Not—Brave On the Battlefield But Not Masters of Their Appetites—Since War by Their Vices Have Disgraced the Uniform—Fortunately These Are Few.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Driver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 27.—In this sermon for Memorial day the preacher marks the line between true and false heroism, utters a warning against military imposters and gives some timely advice to the old soldiers. The text is Leviticus xix. 32, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head and honor the face of the old man."

Some time ago it was my privilege and honor to address the old soldiers in the Veterans' home at Sawtelle, in southern California. Just before I descended the platform the leader of the cheering made a strange request. He said: "Please don't throw any bouquets to the old soldiers. They don't like it." But, though I may not praise them, I feel like doing it just the same, for any man who can stand before a great audience like this, made up of Grand Army veterans, and not feel like taking off his hat and bowing before them has not the first elements of patriotic pride. He has never intelligently read the story of the glorious deeds that these men have done. A Truly brave man always dislikes to be eulogised. The only time you can compliment such men face to face and not have them protest is when they are lying in their caskets, and even then I think some of the old soldiers, although cold, are still protesting against the praises uttered over their unconscious forms.

Eulogy in a Christian pulpit, however, must always be a discriminating utterance. Since the banker is under a sacred obligation to speak nothing but the truth. The heroes whom we honor are too noble to desire praise that ignores the facts. A great army such as that which won the great battalking wars one and necessarily comprised some men who were not patriots, men who shirked their duty and who in the hottest hour of the fight when the life of war have received honor they did not deserve. Some men, too, who were brave on the battlefield were not rulers of themselves and since the army disbanded have by their sins and their vices disgraced their uniform. Few indeed, compared with the whole number, are these ignoble soldiers, and their misdeeds we speak of with sorrow and regret, deploring them all the more because of the heroism that we honor.

First, let us go and stand by the cradle of the Grand Army of the Republic. When you do this you will be just as much surprised at the genesis of this organization as I was. I always felt that Major B. F. Stephenson founded this society as a social organization, if I might use that word. I thought that as these old veterans had fought and bled together, therefore they wanted to build their annual campfires of fellowship and communion. They wanted to meet together and talk over the old campaigns, sing the old war songs and recall the memories of the battlefield. But that was not the primal purposes of this organization. It was started to help the helpless, the aged and the sick veterans and their families. It was not started as an institution of mercy for widows and orphans.

Let me read to you the following words once spoken by Commander-in-Chief George S. Merrill: "Into the hospitals of the land every year there came the presence of disabled veterans, suffering families, distressed homes. The aid to these came cheerfully, but without organization, and the frequency of the call made it burdensome in the sense that something in the line of systematized effort was not only desirable but imperative. And over this there sprang up veteran associations, with varying plans, although generally united in a common field of rendering assistance to those in need, who had dared the danger and shared the conflict." Ah, my friends, the Grand Army of the Republic had a nobler origin than to see how it first realized the promise that it would be started. It was not conceived for the purpose of praising the deeds of its members. It was started to help the sick, the maimed and the blind. It was started to care for the widows and the orphans of the fallen comrades. And as I take off my hat to honor the empty sleeve of the old veteran I also take off my hat to honor the little button of the veteran. In that little button I see the symbol of charity, the sympathy and the big-hearted brotherhood.

Having seen how the Grand Army of the Republic was started, we naturally take a step forward and see how it became the greatest political factor of this country for over a quarter of a century after the war was ended. It you go to one of the old soldiers and ask him what are the politics of the Grand Army of the Republic he will vehemently deny that the Grand Army of the Republic has any political affiliations. But you and I know what a power it became in politics. It dominated the northern conventions. It controlled the nominations. It was one of the grandest spectacles of modern politics ever witnessed. It was a gigantic association for helping and succoring the comrades of the march, the bivouac, the fire, and right nobly did the members stand together.

Again and again this organization elected its representatives to the White House. Grant, Hayes, Garfield, McKinley, all were a soldier's uniform. Heroism, etcetera warning against military imposters and gives some timely advice to the old soldiers. The text is Leviticus xix. 32, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head and honor the face of the old man."

Ah, my friends, the Grand Army of the Republic had a nobler stalwart frame, that indomitable spirit, overcome and laid low by a degrading habit! If one so strong, so fearless, so brave has fallen, God keep us weaker mortals close to himself, lest we, too, succumb to temptation.

I am never so impressed with this thought as when visiting some of the old soldiers' homes of America. Without any exceptions I believe the veterans' retreat of Washington or Milwaukee or Danville or Bartelle can be counted among the garden spots of the world. The one of southern California is especially beautiful. Go there any time of the year, and you can pick flowers in the gardens. There you are within a few minutes' ride of the great Pacific ocean. There the libraries are filled with books and the Memorial hall has its regular entertainments and the aviary is filled with birds and the setting for this noble institution under the trees. All that most of us feel is needed to make life happy is there. The old soldiers do not have to worry about their meals or their money or the beds in which they are to sleep or the doctors and the nurses who will care for them when they are sick. All is provided for them. But as a class the old soldiers in Sawtelle aren't happy. No. Go to the old soldiers' home and begin to talk with these veterans and you will find them discontented. What do they say? Praise their surroundings? No. Invariably they will find fault with the veterans' food, the life led and with their associates and with this and that and with the other thing. They have nothing to do, and so a large part of them spend most of their time in complaining. O man, I want you to thank God that you have plenty of work day in and day out, month in and month out, year in and year out. Wh.n a friend came to Sir Walter Scott the celebrated French antiquarian, and asked him why he always was at work he answered, "I engrave lest I hang myself." Thus all men can most easily find contentment, not in idleness, but in severe and unrelenting toil.

But there is still another fact I want you to notice about the old soldiers. The approach of old age and of death does not change a man's views toward God. If he is a blasphemer when he is young, he is apt to be a blasphemer when he is old. If he ridicules and defies at the Bible when he is young, he is apt to be a scoffer and an agnostic when he is old. The most solemn instance I ever heard uttered was by the chairman of the meeting when I spoke before the Old Soldiers' home, at Sawtelle. Mr. Thomas, an old friend, "Fraternity, charity, loyalty," are the watchwords of the Grand Army of the Republic, they are the watchwords of the church, the home and the state.

But as I see the long line of the "bluecoats" called the Grand Army of the Republic file past I am struck with another fact. There is not a large enough set of men on earth living than these men, take them as a whole. I was talking with one of the old soldiers in one of our large soldiers' homes some time ago. He said, "Some of the finest, noblest men I have ever met in my life." But though that be true, yet on account of the prominence of the organization and also on account of the great number who compose this organization impostors and hypocrites will have been a means of discrediting the organization to some extent in the eyes of many people who trace it back. Sins become multiplied almost as rapidly since the war closed as have the numbers of people who trace it back since the coming of the Mayflower in 1620.

Shame, shame, we say when so many noble men have fought and bled and sacrificed for their country that impostors and hypocrites should parade about as heroes. And because these impostors have crept in upon the pension rolls, the country has been somewhat imperious. At the same time there are hundreds and thousands of noble veterans deserving of better treatment, who are being allowed to suffer and who have no adequate provision made for them and the support of their dear ones.

But the Grand Army of the Republic teaches us still another lesson, and it is a terrible one. A man may be a hero in his youth—may be a hero on the field of battle, yet anything but a hero in his private life. He may be brave as a "Chinaman" on the field of battle, a man foe and yet a coward before the temptations of the flesh, and, though sin is repellant when it is witnessed in any man, it is most pathetic and to be deprecated when it is seen in an old soldier who is drunk and immoral or who is vile of tongue. A soldier does not necessarily have to be a physical coward to be a moral castaway. A man may be a moral coward and yet be physically as brave as a lion. So many old soldiers have lost the battle of life not because they were cowardly in the field of carnage, but because they were not brave enough to defy temptation when it came to them in time of peace.

To illustrate my thought let me draw for you the picture of one of my dearest friends. He was one of the leading members of the first church of which I was pastor. He can see him now, straight as an Indian war chief. He carried himself as only that man does who has been a soldier and marched to the drums. No music was to him so sweet as the booming of the cannon on a national holiday. I remember how he used say: "Do you hear it? We old fellows have often had for a revelle the sound of those guns." He was also the lyrical charge of the Sunken road at Fredericksburg. He led his company there during the awful carnage, sweeping over that field. He followed Grant on through the Wilderness. He never flinched in the smoke of battle, but how notoriously the temptations of sin entrapped him! Lower and lower he sank. The cup had been to him as it had such a cruel grasp of mine to get to watch and wrestle and to pray and most frequently reached out for the poisonous cup. After I left that church and went to other fields of labors from my old home came saying, "Captain So-and-so is not doing well." He was a captain in the army. He drank up his business. He drank up the fortune his father left him. He drank a big mortgage on his home. He sent his girls forth to work for their daily bread. And the last time I saw him sin had almost completed its work. It did not at first recognize the physical and mental and spiritual wreck. But I saw him sitting in my old church I said, "What a mighty power sin must be to have conquered so valiant a hero!" Oh, it was pitiful to see that

PALE, WEAK WOMEN

Gain New Health and Strength Through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Arcadia is just the doctor's name for bloodlessness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People actually make new, rich blood. They cure the worst disease or ailment. Blood is bound to cure bloodlessness. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure it. Mrs. Jane Card, a well-known resident residing at Prince's Lodge, Arcadia, N.S., has says, "I am an enthusiastic believer in the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a medicine for anaemia. I had suffered from the trouble almost from childhood, but a few years ago it developed into a severe case. I was pale and waxy; my lips seemed bloodless and my entire system was run down. I suffered from headaches, dizziness, weak spells and heart trouble. My friends feared that I was going into a decline. I took medicine from a number of doctors, but found no benefit. At last a friend who had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with such results advised me to try them. In a short time I began to feel the benefit, and after a couple of months I was quite well again. The color had returned to my face, my appetite improved and I had gained weight. In fact, I was entirely rejuvenated by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I am sure that they saved my life. I am always glad to speak a word for any disease that isn't originally caused by bad blood but when Dr. Williams' Pink Pills replace bad blood with good, rich blood they strike right at the root and cause of all common diseases like anaemia, headache and backache, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance, kidney trouble and the secret troubles that every woman knows but none of them like to talk about. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The young people of Parma and Adolphustown celebrated Victoria day by a picnic at the Bay shore, Adolphustown. There was quite a number of young people from a distance. Among those were Mr. Roy Davis and sister Miss. Miss Rose Shannon, Mr. Gerald Shannon and Mr. Ernest Drury, all of Napanee. Miss Shannon and her friend Miss Eleanor Parks, N. C. L. also attended the picnic. The day was spent in boating and playing games and at five o'clock in the afternoon all went to lunch. They all did justice to the ample supply of goodies which the girls provided. Just at sunset the parties all started in wagons for Mr. Harry Hawley's, where they stopped. Here they tripped the light fantastic toe to music organ music by Mr. Edwin Roblin, Adolphustown. The party broke up at half-past eleven, when the young people repaired to their respective homes. A lovely day, pretty girls, and merry young hearts all combined to make this Victoria day celebration a day long remembered by the young people who attended it.

WAGARVILLE.

Wagarville was quite surprised when one of its young men, Mr. Will Rutledge, was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Drafton, of Napanee, on the 24th May, by Rev. Mr. Kingston. A number from here were present at the wedding.

A bad accident occurred to Mr. John Vanvolkenburg, who was home from the 1st concession on Saturday evening. He was driving a frightened by a motor car, when the horse was flying along the road, and in two leaps it was in the ditch. The wagon was thrown out, but the horse, Mr. Vanvolkenburg and his daughter, Mrs. Allen Wagar, held on. Mr. Fred. Kirkham spent a few days with his parents on the 2nd concession of Sylvester Crook, one of the oldest Township of Ernestown, passed away peacefully on Monday, May 28th, and was laid to rest in the Bethesda cemetery on Sunday last. Deceased was born in Canada and resided in Ernestown all his life. Mr. Crook was a member of the Methodist church at Wagarville, then a member of the Bethesda church, where he died. Mr. Crook's death was caused by Bright's disease. He was a staunch Liberal. The funeral was largely attended by Rev. Mr. Kingston at 2 o'clock p.m., by Mrs. Kim. Grange, of which Mr. Crook was a member, and three sons to mourn his loss, Mrs. Mc Crean, Solomon and Lewis Crook.

Clydesdales for Service.

JOE THE BANKER (3215)

This fine young horse is growing much in favor since his colts have shown up so good. His colts figured prominently at the fall fairs, and one owned by Mr. A. V. Price, of Wesley, took first prize, with its dam (not a large mare), in the general purpose class at Napanee, Centreville and Tamworth. Joe is well muscled and a heavy-boned horse, a beautiful dapple brown with small star, has excellent feet and has proved a sure foal-getter.

There is, and always will be, a good demand for this class of horse, and if the breeders of to-day had a better sire and sale quate supply, a large sum of money would flow into the hands of the farmers.

We expect he will leave his groom's stable, Oak Flats, each Monday morning, coming to Moscow at night, where he will remain till Wednesday morning, then go to Joseph Yeomans' for noon, and W. A. Fisher's, Strathcona, for night; Thursday to Violet, Thorpe, and Camden East for night, returning home Friday noon, and to Saturday in Oak Flats, where he will remain till Monday morning.

NO VAR (3459)

Commonly known by his every-day name, "Sandy," has wintered well and comes in good healthy condition, and has never been over done, so should be fully as successful a getter this season as he has proven to be in the past one.

We have had a tempting offer to send this fine young horse to New York State for service by a gentleman who saw him here, but we have decided not to send him away, as we have always given us a good part nage, and "Sandy" has a wide reputation as being one of the finest Clydesdales in Ontario. His colts are well and favorably known; some from ten to eleven months old could not be bought for $100 each. Both Sandy and Joe balanced the scales at 1,765 lbs. on April 17th.

He will go to George Price's, Yarker, each Tuesday afternoon, returning at night; then go to Enterprise Wednesday afternoon and from there to to Centreville Thursday forenoon and home for night, where he will remain the balance of the week.

Health and weather permitting we expect the above routes will be continued. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Parties disposing of their mares before foaling time will be responsible for insurance. Parties trying mares and not returning them must pay full insurance. Service fees payable at Moscow, without further notice, when there are reasonable signs of mares being in foal. Money sent by registered letter or money order at our risk.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

The School Teacher—Willie, can you tell me the meaning of Calvary? Yes. The Bright Scholar—It's the place where married people live.

A Cure for Fever and Ague.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are compounded for use in any climate, and they will be found to preserve their powers in any latitude. In fever and ague they act upon the secretions and neutralize the poisonous matter which found its way into the blood. They correct the impurities which find entrance into the system through drinking water or food and if used as a preventive fevers are avoided.

Sir—For nearly forty years Miss Oldun had looked under the bed every night for the presence of a man, but at last she discovered one.

Him—What did she do—call for a policeman?

Her—No; she telephoned for a minister.

Just the Thing That's Wanted.—A pill that acts with the greatest power, yet is so compounded that certain ingredients of it preserve their power to act upon the intestinal canals, so as to clear them of excreta, the retention of which cannot but be hurtful, was long looked for by the medical profession. It was found in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are the result of much expert study, and are scientifically prepared so as a "exative and an alterative in one.

"Such a nice young man took me to dinner last night—such a well mannered man. D'you know when the coffee come and 'e'd poured it in 'is saucer, 'e'had no need to blow on it like a common person, 'e fanned it with 'is hat!"

The World is Full of Pains.—The aches and pains that afflict humanity are many and constant, arising from a multitude of indistinguishable causes, but in the main owing to a manifest negligence in taking care of his health. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is the panacea of a universal cry for some specific which would speedily relieve pain, and has filled its mission to a remarkable degree.

He loves to spend a pleasant hour

But all the girls are getting sour,
For that is all he spends.

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator does not require the help of any purgative medicine to complete its cure. Give it a trial, and be convinced.

Lawyer—I say, doctor, why are you always running up lawyer's bills? Doctor, dryly—Well, your profession does not make a habit of men, does it?

Lawyer—Why, no; you certainly have the advantage of us there, doctor.

The never failing medicine, Holloway's Corn Cure, removes all kinds of corns, warts, etc.; even the most difficult to remove cannot withstand this wonderful remedy.

"Mamma, Charlie asked me for a kiss, but I said 'No,' very decidedly." "You should not have done so, dear. You could say in such cases, 'I'd rather not.'"

We have no hesitation in saying that Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is the most reliable family medicine ever introduced for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera and all summer complaints, cac sickness, etc. It promptly relieves and never fails in its effect a positive cure. Old Lady—What are you crying for, little boy?

Boy—Please, mum, my brother has lost his new hat.

Old Lady—Hut! surely you needn't cry about it.

Boy—Please, mum, I was a-wearing it when 'e lost it.

Mamma—Why, Jimmy, you are getting awfully tanned going to school.

Jimmy—Tain't the sun—it's the teacher.

Mrs. Yacht, superciliously—My husband has a beautiful yacht. I don't suppose your husband can afford such a luxury, yet?

Mrs. Nacht—No, the best he can do is to hold the mortgages on the one your husband has.

A certain one day a little girl who had chewing gum had extended her feet out into the aisle of the room and tripped a dozen others under the desk. The teacher, whose strong point was propriety, said in a severe tone: "Jennie Dow, take your gum out of your mouth and put your feet immediately."

Visitor's Wife—Now, can any of you children tell me of another Ark?

Bright Child—Ark the 'Erald Angels Sing?

RADIANT WOMANHOOD.

The glory and satisfaction of beautiful womanhood is known only to those possessing the unlimited advantages of health. Remarkable Test.

Hyomei Has Been Known for Years and is Guaranteed to Cure Catarrh.

We have given Hyomei a most thorough and remarkable test.

The remedy has made so many cures that we have urged its use in the most chronic cases of catarrh.

Breathed for a few minutes four times a day, through an inhaler that comes with every outfit, it soothes the irritated mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, kills the catarrhal germs, and restores complete health. Its healing, antiseptic fragrance penetrates to the most remote air passages, as no medicine taken into the stomach can possibly do. Immediate relief almost always follows the use of Hyomei, and great benefit is seen after a few days' treatment.

The complete Hyomei outfit costs only $1, and consists of an inhaler that can be carried in the pocket or purse, and a small bottle of Hyomei. If this is not sufficient for a complete cure, additional bottles of Hyomei can be obtained for 50 cts.

Compare this small expense with the time taken into the stomach can possibly do. Immediate relief almost always follows the use of Hyomei, and great benefit is seen after a few days' treatment.

If you cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Write to-day for complete booklet that will enlitle you to secure aid of our medical department without charge. The R. T. Booth Company, Hyomei Building, Ithaca, N.Y.

LIME LAKE.

W. thought we could not show our love for our King in a better manner than by joining the service of the new Methodist church on the birthday of our late Queen. The day was fine, and although people only knew about this for a short time, a large crowd gathered early in the day over the circuit. A good programme was rendered, one of the speakers being Rev. Mr. Duke, of Selby, a gentleman from Port Oark, the chairman of the district. Mr. John Henderson, the esteemed resident of the community, placed in the hands of Mr. DeMille some memories of the old church—"Hoalthing that I am no public speaker, I thought perhaps I could write a few items of interest regarding our old church. It was about the year 1860 or 1861 that we thought we ought to have a church in which to worship God. We got together and elected the men whose names follow as trustees, Thomas Brandon, Wm. Henderson, Geo. Hall, Paul Henderson, David Henderson, Geo. McLaughlin, and John Brandon. The pastor in charge at this time was Rev. John Ferguson.

"So we built, and although only a poor apology for a church, we felt proud of it, and the good Lord owned us in the work. We did the best we could. We were all poor, living in shanties or at best log houses. Prominent in church work was James Carmichael, father of Elijah Jarmin, Wm. McConnell, grandfather of A. E. McConnell, and Nathan Dunn, father of Mrs. John Busby. The people were unanimous in their desire to build a church, so worked willingly and the church was finished and dedicated in the year 1862. I cannot give exact dates—and who officiated at the first communion, if there was one held, I cannot remember."

The corner stone of the present church was laid by Mr. Chas. Andrews, of Roblin. A collection was taken up among those present and about $28.00 secured. Supper was served in the old church, and everyone went away well satisfied with their day.

We thank our friends from the other appointments for their kindly interest in our undertaking. We trust they may come again and mingle with us in the dedication of the new church when it is completed.

OLDEST MAN IN WORLD

Stuurman, the Bushman, is believed to be the oldest man in the world. He is an old native of Cape Colony, said to be 146 years old. It is known for certain that sixty-five years ago he was a very old man, and that his son still living, is over ninety years old. He is one of the few genuine bushmen still left, and talks no English. Even when he wandered over the veldt where Jameson fell was he. He holds that the farm of Stuurman's Puts and the country all round really belong to him, and living in a hut on the top of a hill he is the sole shelter of bushes and rags, he is monarch of all he surveys. He is in full possession of all his faculties, has a wonderful sight, and can walk twelve miles of decay, though they are worn down to the gums by a century and a half of use.

First street, hospital feeling, and the disposition to effect of any sort will be rapidly removed by the use of Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills. Put up in the Medical Hall. — Fred. L. Hooper.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

Oakland, Cal., May 10th, '06.

My Dear Templeton,—This is about the first time I have had an opportunity to write to you at any length regarding the disaster to our dear San Francisco and surrounding cities, but now I am unable to write more than half of our great misfortune. You, of course, have had the telegraphic reports as to San Francisco in comparison with what it was had it not been for the fact that people everywhere are speaking of the energy and pluck displayed by the citizens of San Francisco, and almost immediately the city, particularly in the working districts, was in flames. The shock came about 5.15 a.m., on the morning of April 18th, while the great majority of our people were still asleep, and while the shock was the most severe that has ever visited the Valley of Chloe, the damage would have been slight to San Francisco in comparison to

A GREAT OFFER.

One of the greatest magazines on earth for the price is "The Delineator." The publishers have never before taken a subscription for less than a year. During the month of June you may call at Henry's Bookstore, and for 25 cents you can get The Delineator for three months, July, August and September. Make a note of this, and call or send the 25 cents. 22

Do you owe the printer?

This week we are sending a statement of account to each subscriber to The Beaver whose time has expired or who is in arrears. We require money at all times to run a live paper, and our readers know that though their subscription is but a cent, still these single dollars aggregate a tidy sum when spread over a circulation of almost four thousand. At this time, however, we are installing an expensive printing press, and ask our readers to lend a helping hand in remitting. An addressed envelope accompanies the statement. Don't risk sending money without getting a postal note, express money order or registering.

LETTER FROM LONDON.

We take the liberty of publishing the following from a Lennox old boy, son of the late James Close, of Chambers, who has been a resident of London for a number of years. Mr. Close has lately gone into publishing fisherman's charts of the British Isles, and has succeeded beyond his fondest expectations.

Dear Mr.—Kindly send me your valuable paper one another year, for which please find enclosed a postoffice order for $2.10. (I have forgotten almost how to write dollars, so accustomed have I become to pounds and shillings.) I think my subscription is overpaid, and I suppose to this country may be extra, so you can credit me with the correct amount. Your paper follows me all over the British Isles and into the Continental countries, which I frequently visit. I would not take two dollars a copy and lose it. It is like a long letter from home. An Australian gentleman I met was so taken up with Canada news of Toronto asked me to let him have my old copies to send to friends in Australia.

I am writing this from Milford Haven, where the Channel fleet has just run in in connection with the manoeuvres. They turned their search lights on the town and forts on Wednesday night, and nearly blinded everyone who was outside at the time. About fifteen of the ships all turned their powerful lights on at once. It was a strange sight to see forts three miles away flooded with light, whilst darkness intervened between our side of the town and the forts. I have met many of the officers, and must say I never saw more obliging and unassuming class of men anywhere. I frequently have to consult them in connection with my business, and it is surprising the amount of trouble they will take to give me the information I require.

While I was on board one gunboat a petty officer called my attention to a breach of discipline on the part of a blackjacket by the officer of the day. He immediately asked, "Has the captain heard or seen anything of this?" On being informed he had not, this officer said, "Don't report it formally; let it go." They are really a first-class fine fellows. I find infinitely more swagger and bounce among subaltern officers than among officers of line regiments, and naval officers in command of cruisers and other warships in the regular service. I suppose it is their business to command, whilst in the volunteers a little authority over men in such a society is many of the officers that it completely turns their heads.

My ideas of these men as gleaned from reading histories, as that of austere, unapproachable, aristocratic beings has been completely swept away by my contact with them from time to time, when I was really getting them a lot of trouble, from which they might easily have exposed themselves had they chosen to do so.

I was in the battlefield of Waterloo on New Years day and had dinner on the very ground where Napoleon's old guard made the last famous charge, and failed for the first time in their history. Familiar with the story of Waterloo, I could almost imagine I could see the French cavalry forming on the slope of La Belle Alliance, Napoleon's headquarters, about three-quarters of a mile away, as Napoleon called up brigade after brigade for the last great charge. On the one were we stood the British Guards were rapidly forming to meet this final onset, and when all were in position they were to engage the artillery fire, and when the French were almost upon them rose in a solid square and, cheering, charged the Chiffon and Hougoumont, take the rocks that encircled their position. The ground is so little changed since that can still be seen in the walls of the farm-yard and in the chateau. I picked up several pieces of brick from the old wall. You can see any number of bones on the part of the field which was worked up. I think they were those of horses. I did not think bones would last so long, but the quantity to be seen was too great to be human remains, even under ordinary circumstances. Observer tells us 40,000 French, 16,000 Prussians, and 12,000 British and Germans were killed. The whole scene seemed to live again to me as I stood on the field from the Lion Mound.

Now I must close, Mr. Editor, for you will have task enough to read this writing as it is.

Yours faithfully,
ALBERT CLOSE.

NEWBURGH.

The High School team played the return game of ball with Napanee in Napanee, on Saturday. Some of the boys left their batting clothes at home, for with few exceptions they could not hit the ball. When the game came, Napanee winning by a score of 6-4. Skinner pitched the winnings and Shorey three innings for the locals, and Trimmer and McNeil worked for the home team. The boys have a kick coming over their defeat. It was a close game in which a timely hit would have turned the score. D. D. Moore umpired the game and gave satisfaction. The local fans speak highly of Napanee play here again. Letter from Mr. Bell, Napanee, re the bridge over the Moira at Napanee. Referred to finance committee.

Mr. Creighton corroborated the statement of Mr. Archambault re the road he said was in a desperate condition.

Mr. Martin said this was what he expected, when the Council should not to appoint a superintendent over all the County roads. Some years ago, tenths of the roads should be put in shape first, before the better roadways that were attempted. This must not be done, and perhaps this would be a good time to make a change if there is not sufficient in the appropriation.

Permission was given that a committee of the Council of Ameliasburg, Prince Edward, James Reid and W. G. Wilson, be granted the use of the Council for arbitrate a school dispute.

ACCOUNTS

From Alexandra School, Toronto, with account for keeping of Lillian Files, $1.00; paid. Hotel Napanee, Napanee Express, $1.00; paid. Hotel Napanee, $2.50; paid. Dr. Dafoe, $38; paid. Dominion Bridge Co., $2.55; paid. For road machinery, Sawyer-Massey Co., $681; to Hoads and Bridges committee. E. B. Miller, $5.00, for repairs covering bridge; to Hoads and Bridges committee. Hart & Riddell, $30.80; to County Property committee. The Canadian Woods Co., $1.00; to J. Chas. steam roller, $2,500; to Roads and Bridges committee.

Col. Clyde had not seen the new roller in operation, and asked for information as to its work.

Mr. Martin said he did not think the roller was much good. It had been at his place as he had seen it operated in his division.

Mr. Mack favored the machine had not been given a fair show. It is a heavy machine, and regardless of the weight, with smooth wheels, to operate well it must have the roads properly graded, and that with a pretty steep crown.

Mr. Baker thought a test should be made. The roller was bought by the County Council, and the members of the Company should have sent a competent man to operate it, when it was first used.

The Warden said he was not altogether impressed with the work done by the roller on the roads leading to Deseronto. He had found that the road bed that had been prepared for the roller in many instances was in no opinion damaged instead of improved. Perhaps the machine had had a fair trial. If not this should be done at once.

Mr. Frank Bagley, who had operated the roller, thought the work the machine was asked to do was not suitable. The gravel was loose, and when the crusher was attached, of course it could not draw it. The roller was working when the roller went into the ditch. No machine would work well in a narrow road.

On motion the report of the Company, stated that if a ten-ton roller would not work on the roads where they are at present, the addition of fifteen-ton roller would be still worse. The machine is generally made for County roads, and had been in operation for about a month. The roads were crowned too steep.

Mr. Mack moved, seconded by Mr. Martin, that the Council ask to a ditch which stopped the water from the County highway swamp land, in the Township of Ernestown.

On motion consideration of the report of Company was laid over until to-morrow morning.

Moved by Mr. Martin, seconded by Mr. Pool, Messrs. H. A. Bedell and F. P. Johnston be appointed auditors for the County. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Mack, seconded by Mr. Pool, that the steam roller be named after the late Warden Sagar. Carried.

Council adjourned till 10 a.m., tomorrow morning.

WEDNESDAY—SECOND DAY.

Council met as per adjournment. Warden in the presidential chair. All the members present.

Minutes of yesterday were read and confirmed.

From estate of Wm. Templeton, $10, was ordered paid.

Mr. Ten. for Mr. J. I. Chase Co., was heard respecting the steam roller. He had been asked to see that the roller fulfilled their part of the agreement, and that the Company fulfilled their part of the contract.

Mr. Pool thought he and his associate, Mr. Paul, did not like the roller, and that it was not adapted. They had not seen it work neither had it been in their division at work. He was not in a position to act on the matter.

Warden thought the ten days' test was not a fair one. It was a compromise between Mr. Anderson and Addington. It might do for a private road, but not for the County. It was necessary for the test in this case. He did not think the roller would do the work.

ACCOUNTS.

Victoria Industrial School, re Manson Abrams, $10.71; paid. Medill Bros., $1.30; paid. Hotel Napanee, $1.25; paid. Jas. Richardson, $4.50; paid. Boyle & Son, $41.21; paid. County Property committee. Boyle & Son, $41, $2.05; paid.

Mr. Martin stated that he and Mr. Baker had learned that an account of the County road system, where farm lands were drained into the road, that the earth had been thrown up on the side of the road. As it was not a desirable material to place on the road, he wished to know whether the County should be at the expense of removing it. He would bring in a motion to that effect.

Moved by Mr. Wood, seconded by Mr. Hall, that the equalization of the County be the same as last year. Lost.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Martin, seconded by Mr. Baker, that the members be allowed $4.00 per day. Carried.

The Largest Jack Manufacturer in the World Writes about

Zutoo

Regarding your Zutoo Tablets I beg to say: I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all, of the so-called "cures" on the market, till warned by my physician to discontinue their use on account of their bad effects on the heart. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never fail to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost.

Bomb for King and Queen

NARROW ESCAPE OF THE NEWLY MARRIED KING AND QUEEN.

Madrid, June 1.—The public rejoicings over the marriage of King Alfonso and Princess Victoria had a terribly dramatic sequel at 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, as a bomb thrown from an upper window exploded with deadly effect near the coach occupied by the King and Queen. Providentially, King Alfonso and Queen Victoria escaped by an electric wire deflecting the bomb, but 12 persons were killed outright and the remainder of the personal and military escort, and others, were injured, two fatally. Many others were injured.

The official statement subsequently issued says: "Two bombs were thrown, one exploding in the air by artifice, a telegraph wire, and the other falling so close to the royal carriage that a groom at the head of the wheel horses was killed, as also were the wheel horses."

THE KILLED.

Captain Barrios, commanding par: of the King's escort; Lieutenant Iberbent, Lieutenant Prendergast, six soldiers, the Marquise of Hesa and her daughter, Don Antonio Calvo and his niece, aged 6 years, Jose Solo, 70 years of age, Luis Fonseca.

One royal groom, who was leading a horse drawing the coach carrying the King and Queen.

Several of those killed were standing on the balcony of the house from which the bomb was thrown. The explosion occurred just as the royal coupe were about to enter the palace. During the holidays in the vicinity a stunning a large number of people, and throwing the cortege into inextricable confusion.

KING AND QUEEN SAFE.

The royal coach was brought to a sudden stop by the shock, officers and soldiers of the escort falling to the ground about the equerry and horses that had been killed. The screams of the terrified multitude mingled with the groans of the dying.

It was immediately seen that the royal coach was intact, except as it had been damaged by flying splinters. King Alfonso immediately a gated and examined Queen Victoria out of the carriage. They then entered another coach and were driven swiftly to the palace.

In the meantime the scene of the tragedy presented a horrible spectacle, with dead men and never ceasing groans literally torn to pieces. Intense excitement prevailed.

MISCREANT CAPTURED.

The place from which the bomb was thrown is a boarding house. The chamber from which he came and buried was taken May 22d by a man from Barcelona, giving the name of Manuel. When the police surrounded the house the man escaped.

CONCEALED IN BOUQUET.

An official statement says: The bomb which was concealed in a bouquet, was of polished steel half a centimeter thick. It was a cylinder with a third floor window.

The procession had come to a temporary halt, with the royal carriage exactly opposite the house when the bomb was thrown. The missile fell to the right of the royal carriage, between the leaders and the horses and the front pair of wheels.

COURAGEOUS BUT IN TEARS.

The Duke of Connaught was immediately informed upon the carriage being helped out the King and then the Queen, who showed great courage and met emotion. Both, however, behaved with the utmost courage. They entered another carriage and the procession then was resumed. On their arrival at the royal palace, as was noticed by many, the King and Queen both were in tears. They were quickly surrounded by foreign princes, each anxious to show sympathy and offer congratulations on the miraculous escape.

The indignation of the people over the outrage was great.

A member of the civil guard this afternoon recognized Hamilton, the English suspect, as a companion of Manuel Morales, on the balcony from which the bomb was thrown on the Royal carriage. The two men were also seen together in a cafe.

The funerals of eight officers and men, the Marquise of Hesa and her daughter and the Countess of Orderve, took place this afternoon in the presence of a vast concourse. The cemetery military honors were rendered. The King and the Government were represented.

The revised list of casualties places the dead at twenty and the injured at fifty. Among the dead are Captain of General Weyler, formerly Governor of Cuba.

MANUEL MORALES DIES BY HIS OWN HAND.

Madrid, June 4.—Manuel Morales, the wretch who ruthlessly slaughtered a score of fellow-citizens in Calle Mayor, on Thursday, in a vain attempt to murder King and Queen of Spain, is dead by his own hand, thus adding another towardly crime to the list before he died.

About eight o'clock, on Saturday evening, Morales, who was under the guard of workingmen, entered the station at Torrejon de Ardoz, about fifteen miles from Madrid, on the road to Saragossa. He asked the time the next train would depart for Barcelona, and then bought food in a tray by shop. His Cain-onian accent at first attracted attention, but no one was then noticed that his workman's suit was entirely new and did not correspond to that usually worn by a peasant in his station in life. His face and manners showing him to be a man of some distinction. A native watchman from a neighboring estate chanced to be present. He noticed the facial resemblance of Morales to the dead King Alfonso and the man soon on the balcony from which the bombs were thrown, particularly the long, thin, and pointed face and the closely-cropped moustache. He then observed a scar on the dead man's left hand, which the stranger was evidently anxious to conceal. He hurt, and also that there was a small front tooth on the side of the face. The stranger sought to take a road leading into the country, but he was at once intercepted him, and demanded to know his identity. Morales declined to give this, whereupon a guard arrested him. Instantly Morales drew a revolver from his pocket and fired, the guard falling dead. Morales then ran up the road, but a small group of villagers ahead barred his passage. Thereupon he deliberately pointed the weapon to his own head and shot himself forward in the roadway, turning the revolver upon himself. He sent a shot in the region of his heart, expiring a few minutes later.

Senor Canalejas, proprietor of the hotel from the balcony of which Morales threw the bomb, viewed the body yesterday, and completely identified it as that of his recent guest.

HOW TO BREAK UP A COLD.

It may be a surprise to many to learn that a bad cold can be more completely broken up in one to two days' time. The first symptoms of a cold are a dry, hot skin, followed by a watery discharge from the nose, and a stuffy sensation in the head. When Chamberlain's cough remedy is taken every dose helps to relieve the severance of these symptoms, it counteracts the tendency of a cold to settle on the lungs, system to a healthy condition within a day or two. Double the crop off the same ground, and every one a sound one. Introduced in England in 1903 at $500 per 14 lbs.; three months later its blight proof and enormous cropping features caused the greatest sensation, resulting in record prices—and time, as high as $1250 per lb., being paid, and $250 for one tuber.

Even as recently as September last, when Mr. G. Massey sold 14 lbs., of Eldorados for $20 ($1400 people were amazed and incredulous; yet three months later the same gentleman received a cheque for $2400 (twenty four hundred) for 14 lbs., of the same variety.—Free Press, Highland Creek, 1904.

"The yield of the Eldorado potato, the kind that brought the record price, is reported to run from 150 to 300 lbs., from one lb., of seed tubers."—Rural New Yorker, New York, Jan. 14, 1905.

Introduced here by us in 1905 at $16 per lb. Eldorado is repeating on a smaller scale the sensational crop results in England, taking the record prizes of all time for the U. S., and Canada. April 30 to S. J. Connolly, Fishers, N. Y., 2 bbls. (250 lbs.) of Eldorados sold for $1,000 and sent in to Mr. F. S. Berberrill, Jarvis Street, Toronto, 40 lbs. for $40. A great many sales of 30 bushels, equal to the handling of 5 potato growers, in Canada and the U. S. These are a wave of the history of the truly wonderful potato.

One lb. planted now, within two years will yield enough to plant all the acreage you want. Every lb. planted now is worth $10. Plant now, next year sell seed to your friends.

One lb. planted by us 20th June last, raised 140 lbs. that year. Crops of 800 to 1200 bushels per acre common.

By Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," etc.

Now they rode up a long slope, and at its crest paused to look upon a marvellous scene. Below them stretched a vast plain, full of villages, cornfields, olive-groves, and vineyards. In the centre of this plain, some fifteen miles away, rose a great mountain, which seemed to be walled all about. Within the wall was a city of which the white, flat-roofed houses climbed the slopes of the mountain, and on its crest a level space of land covered with trees and a great, many-towered castle surrounded by more houses.

"Behold the home of Al-je-bal in the Mountain," said Masouda, "where we must sleep to-night. Now brethren, listen to me. Few strangers who enter that castle come thence living. There is still time. I can pass you back as I passed you hither. Will you go on?"

"We will go on," they answered with one breath.

"Why? What have you to gain? You seek a certain maiden. Why seek her here whom you say has been taken to Salah-ed-din? Because the Al-je-bal in byrone days swore to befriend one of your blood. But that Al-je-bal is dead, and another of his line rules who took no such oath. How do you know that he will befriend you—how that he will not enslave or kill you? I have power in this land, why or how does not matter, and I can protect you against all that dwell in it—all I swear I will, for did not one of you save my life?" and she glanced at Godwin —"except my lord Sinan, against whom I have no power, for I am his slave."

"He is the enemy of Salah-ed-din now more than ever. He may help you or he may not. Also," she added with meaning, "you may not wish the help he offers. Oh!" and there was a note of entreaty in her voice, "think, think! For the last time, I pray you think!"

"We have thought," answered Godwin solemnly, "and, I like that spirit well. But hear my counsel. While you are in this city speak no Arabic and pretend that you understand none. Also drink nothing but water, which is good here, for the lord Sinan sets strange wines before his guests, that, if they pass the lips, produce visions and a kind of waking madness in which you might do deeds whereof you were afterwards ashamed. Or you might swear oaths that you could not keep on your souls, and yet could not be broken except at the cost or life."

"Fear not," answered Wulf. "Water shall be our drink, who have had enough of drugged wine," for he remembered the Christmas feast in the Hall at Steeple.

"Yea, Sir Godwin," went on Masouda, "have about your neck a certain ring which you were mad enough to show, a ring with a certain writing on it which none can read save the great men that in this land are called the Assassins. Still, at chances, the secret is safe with me; but be wise; say nothing of that ring and let no one see it."

"Why not?" asked Godwin. "It is the token of our dead uncle to the Al-je-bal."

She looked round her cautiously and replied:

"Because it is, or was once, the great Signet, and a day may come when it will save your lives. Doubtless when the lord who is dead thought it good forever he caused another to be fashioned, so like that I who have had both in my hand could not tell the two apart. To him who holds these ring all gates are open; but to let it be known that you have its double means death. Do you understand?"

"Lastly—though you may think that this seems much to ask—trust me always, even if I seem to play you false, who for your sakes," and she sighed, "have broken oaths and spoken words for which the punishment is to die by torment. Nay, think me not, for I do only what I must who am a slave—a slave."

"A slave to whom?" asked Godwin, staring at her.

"To the Lord of all the Mountains," she answered, with a smile that was sweet yet very sad; and without another word spurred on her horse.

"What does she mean," said Godwin of Wulf, when she was out of hearing, "seeing that if she speaks truth, for our sakes, in warning us against him, Masouda is breaking her fealty to this lord?"

"I do not know, brother, and I do not seek to know. All that we may be a part of a plot to blind us, or it may not. Let well alone and trust to Fortune, say I."

"A good counsel," answered Godwin, and they rode forward in silence.

Presently crossed the plain, and towards evening to the wall of the outer city, halting in front of its great gateway. Here, as at the first castle, a band of solemn-looking mounted men came out to meet them, and, having spoken a few words with Masouda, led them over the drawbridge that spanned the first rock-cut moat, and through triple gates of iron into the city. Then they passed up a street very steep and narrow, from the roofs and windows of the houses on either side of which hundreds of people—many of whom seemed to be negroes—at their evening prayer—watched them go by. At the head of this street they reached another fortified gateway, on the turrets of which, so motionless that at first they took them to be statues cut in stone, stood guards wrapped in long white robes. After parley, this also was opened to them, and again they rode through triple doors.

Then they saw all the wonder of that place, for between the outer city and the castle, with its inner town which was built around and beneath it, spread a vast gulf, over ninety feet in depth. Across this gulf, built of blocks of stone, quite unrailed, and not more than three paces wide, ran a causeway some two hundred yards in length, which causeway was supported upon arches reared up at intervals from the bottom of the gulf.

"Ride on and have no fear," said Masouda. "Your horses are trained to heights, and the mules and mine will follow."

So Godwin, showing nothing in his face of the doubt that he felt in his heart, patted Flame upon the neck, and, after hanging back a little, the horse started lifting his hoofs daintily and glancing from side to side at the terrible gulf beneath. Where Flame went Smoke knew that it could go, and came on bravely, but snorting a little, while the mules, that did not fear heights so long as the ground was firm beneath their feet, followed. Only Masouda's horse was terrified, backed and strove to wheel round, till she drove the spur into it, when of a sudden it started and came over at a bound.

At length they were across and, passing under another gateway which had broad towers on either side of it, rode up the long street beyond and entered a great court-yard round which stood the castle, a vast and frowning fortress. Here a white-robed officer came forward, who met them with a low bow, and with him servants who assisted them to dismount. These men took the horses to a range of stables on one side of the court-yard, hither the brethren followed to see their beasts groomed and fed. Then the officer, who had stood patiently by the while, conducted them through doorways and down passages to the guest chambers, large, stone-roofed rooms, where they found their baggage ready for them. Here Masouda said that she would see them again on the following morning, and departed in company with the officer.

Wulf looked round the great vaulted chamber, which, now that the dark had fallen, was lit by flickering lamps set in iron brackets upon the wall, and said:

"Well, for my part, I had rather pass the night in a desert among the lions than in this dismal place."

Scarcely were the words out of his lips when curtains swung aside and beautiful women came clad in gauzy veils and bearing dishes of food. These they placed upon the ground before them, and, when they had left with nods and smiles, while others brought basins of scented water, which they poured over their hands. Then they sat down and ate the food that was strange to them, but very pleasant to the taste; and while they ate, women whom they could not see sang sweet songs and played upon soft stringed lutes. Wine was offered to them also; but of this, remembering Masouda's words, they would drink only, asking by signs for water, which was brought after a little pause.

When their meal was done, the beautiful women bore away the dishes, and black slaves appeared. These men led them to baths such as they had never seen, where they washed first in hot water, then in cold. Afterwards they were rubbed with spicy-smelling oils, and having been wrapped in white robes, conducted back to their chamber, where they found beds spread for them. On these, being very weary, they lay down, and the last thing that the night people came and looked at was me."

"I dreamed that also," said Wulf; "moreover, I think that it was not all a dream, since there is a coverlet on my bed which was not there when I went to sleep."

Godwin looked at his own, where also was another coverlet added, doubtless at the night grew colder in that high place.

"I have heard of enchanted castles," he said; "now I think that we have found one."

"Ay," replied Wulf, "and it is well enough while it lasts."

They rose and dressed themselves, putting on clean garments which the beautiful women entered the room with breakfast, and they ate. When this was finished, having nothing else to do, they made signs to one of the women that they wished for clothes wherewith to clean their armour, for, as they had been bidden, they pretended to understand no word of Arabic. She nodded, and presently returned with a companion carrying leathers and paste in a jar. Nor did they leave them, but, sitting upon the ground, whether the brethren willed it or no, took the shirts of mail and rubbed them till they shone like silver, while Godwin and Wulf polished their helms, spurs, and bucklers, cleansing their swords and daggers also, and sharpening them with a stone which they carried for that purpose.

Now as these women worked, they began to talk to each other in low voice, and some of their talk, though not all, the brethren understood.

"A handsome pair truly," said the first. "We should be fortunate if we had such men for husbands, although they are Franks and infidels."

"Ay," answered the other; "and from their likeness they must be twins. Now which of them would you choose?"

Then for a long while they discussed them, comparing them feature by feature and limb by limb, until the brethren felt their faces grow red beneath the sunburn and scrubbed furiously at their armour to show a reason for it. At length one of the women said:

"It was cruel of the lady Masouda to bring these birds into the castle's net. She might have warned them."

"Masouda was ever cruel!" answered the other, "and yet I love her, which is unnatural. Yet I think if she loved a man she would love him well, and perhaps that might be worse for him than her hate."

"Are these knights spies?" asked the first.

"I suppose so," was the answer, "silly fellow who think that they can spy upon a nation of spies. They would have done better to keep to fighting, at which, doubtless, they are good enough. What will happen to them?"

"What always happens, I suppose—a pleasant time at first; then, if they can be put to no other use, a choice between the faith and the cup. Or, perhaps, as they seem men of rank, they may be imprisoned in the dungeon tower and held to ransom. Yes, yes; it was cruel of Masouda to trick them so, who may be but travelers after all, desiring to see our city."

Just then the curtain was drawn, and through it entered Masouda herself. She was dressed in a white robe that had a dagger worked in red over the left breast, and her long black hair fell upon her shoulders, although it was half hid by the veil, open in front, which hung from her head. Never had they seen her look so beautiful as she seemed thus.

"Greetings, brothers Peter and John. Is this fit work for pilgrims?" she said in French, pointing to the long swords which they were sharpening.

"Ay," answered Wulf, as they rose and bowed to her, "for pilgrims to this —holy city."

The women who were cleaning the mail bowed also, for it seemed that here Masouda was held in high importance, She took the hauberks from their hands.

"I commend," she said sharply, "I think that you girls talk better than you work. Nay, they must serve. Help these lords to rest, you fools. Fools, I say, is the shirt of the grey-eyed knight. Give it me; I will be his squire," and she snatched the basket from their hands, whereat, when her back was turned, they glanced at one another.

"Now," she said, when they were fully armed and had donned their mantles, "you brethren look as pilgrims should. Listen, I have a message for you. The Master"—and she bowed her head, as did the women, guessing of whom she spoke—"will receive you in an hour's time, till when, if it please you, we can walk in the gardens, which are worth your seeing."

So they went out with her, and as they passed towards the curtain she whispered:

"For your lives' sake, remember all that I have told you—above everything, about the wine and the ring. Or if you dream the drink-dream you will be searched. Speak no word to me save the common matters."

In the passage beyond the curtain white-robed guards were standing, armed with spears, who turned and followed them without a word. First they went to the stables to visit Flame and Smoke, which whinnied as they drew near. These they found well-fed and tended—indeed, a company of grooms gathered round them, discussing their points and beauty, who saluted as the owners of such

FISH AND GAME PROTECTION.

A Local Association Formed.

A representative meeting of those interested in the preservation of our fish and game was held in the Town Hall, Saturday afternoon. The local gentlemen had secured the presence of Mr. A. Kelly Evans and Mr. Oliver Adams, both of Toronto. These gentlemen are making a tour of the Province at their own expense, believing that when once the facts of the case are brought to the attention of the people, commercial and sporting interests will combine and work in protection to the heretofore dilatory manner of enforcing the laws.

Mr. Evans was the first speaker introduced, and made a strong plea for a more democratic consideration of the question. He showed that by a proper administration of the laws every citizen could have good shooting and fishing in his own locality, recently, but that this was only the beginning of the question. A more cosmopolitan view of it showed that the whole community had a vital interest in it whether sportsmen or not. He reviewed by analogy from the state of affairs in Maine some few years ago under laxity of law to the present condition under a law properly enforced, and proved conclusively that the commercial advantages to be derived from fish and game could hardly be exaggerated. Ontario, which is fourteen times as large as Maine, can accommodate a large area of tourists population that the revenue from this source should be an equal some of our leading industries.

Mr. Evans also exposed the present fishing industry of the great lakes with what it was fifty years ago. His mathematics that every citizen had a vested interest in these waters as the source of our food supply but that the representatives of both parties had sacrificed those interests for the support of a few voters living on the front, and he thought it high time that those almost murderous matters be redressed.

Mr. Oliver Adams' remarks were chiefly on the necessity for democratic action in the movement. He dealt in practical way on birds and their uses. In the southern states the quail is protected because it has been found that this species of bird is a great benefit to the farmer by eating noxious weeds, bugs, caterpillars, etc. What we want to-day is better protection for birds and fish. In regard to the latter it is known that there is illegal fishing and in consequence in lakes and streams, where a few years ago there was excellent fishing to-day there is virtually none. The only abiding citizens it was our duty to see that the game laws are properly enforced.

The meeting was then thrown open to discuss the advisability of forming a local organization for the protection of game and fish, the organization to be distinct from, but in world harmony with the Toronto Central bureau.

Messrs. W. F. Hall, W. S. Herrington, K.C., and others addressed the meeting, and it resolved to form a fish and game protective association with Mr. W. C. Herrington as president and Mr. A. Alexander Scott, Tweed, Ont., secretary, who offered to attend the first meeting of the Association. It is hoped that all citizens will assist in making the Association a success. A meeting will be called at an early date to complete organization, and arrange details.

—Mr. C. D. Wagar, of Enterprise, recently sold a pure bred Shorthorn bull, Ashburn, a fine Scotch Stock bull for $100 to Ourondaga. ODESSA.

The Independent Order of Foresters of Odessa will assemble at their hall here on Sunday next, 10th inst., at 2.30 p.m., and from there will proceed to St. Alban's church where the Rev. Rural Dean Dibb will conduct their annual service. A number of visiting brethren are expected. A cordial invitation is extended to the public generally to attend the service.

The service of consecration and confirmation as stated in last week's Beaver, was duly performed in the church of St. Alban in which rome twelve clergymen participated. The former minister, the Rev. Quarterman, who officiated about seventeen years ago, was heartily welcomed by many of the older parishioners. The service was most pleasing and impressive. The sermon was delivered by Rev. Mr. Allen, of Kingston. After all was concluded a large number were invited to partake of refreshments served in Toomey's hall, where the ladies had a collation of the best kind, and ample justice was done to the many good things given them.

On Saturday evening the band gave an open air concert in the centre of the village to an appreciative crowd.

Before going to conference, Rev. McCammus preached the funeral sermon of Mrs. VanPelt at the residence of Mr. Mark Fraser, at which home the lady had been visiting when death came.

The crops are looking fine in this vicinity.

BEST PROMISSORY NOTE

THAT FOR WHICH CHRIST STANDS THE GUARANTEE.

GRANDEST EVER WRITTEN

"And All These Things Shall Be Added Unto You, If You Seek Me First and Follow Me"—Temporal and Spiritual Blessing That Christ is Ready to Give All Those Who Follow Him.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Charles M. Taylor, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 8.—In this sermon the preacher shows the wonderful power that is within the reach of those who accept the invitation and realize the promise in the text, Matt. vi. 33, "And all these things shall be added unto you."

What is a promissory note? "Why," you answer, "it is a written agreement made by one man in the interests of another man." There are many forms of promissory notes, just the same as there are many forms of wills and last testaments, but as a rule the legal form of a promissory note is written thus: "Ninety days after date I promise to pay to the order of Mr. So-and-so $5,000 at the First National Bank of New York city, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Value received." What, I ask, can anybody write a promissory note and get $5,000 on a written agreement like that? "Oh, no," you answer, laughing. "No man can get money at the bank on a promissory note unless he is known to be a wealthy man or he can put up some property as collateral or unless he is able to get some friend to indorse his note whose name is a sufficient guarantee that this promissory note will be paid. If it was not for this fact every head beat in town would be looking to the banks and to the rich men to borrow money, and our banks and capitalists would be bankrupted almost in a day." In other words, a promissory note is of value only when it is signed by a name which is a satisfactory guarantee that the note when it comes due will be paid in full.

Well, then, my friends, this promissory note of my text is one of the grandest and best and most wellkeeping notes ever written. The name of the Lord God Almighty is at the bottom of it. Christ is the King who stands the guarantee that it shall be paid in full. What a glorious promissory note it is! Christ's name is the most potent and glorious in all history. In the records of the centuries you cannot find one instance where Christ has broken his promises. Now Christ says, "If ye will stop worrying about what you shall eat and drink and about what you shall wear and about the house in which you shall live and if you will seek me first and follow me, all these things will be added unto you." Are you ready to accept this text as a promissory note? If so, let us run over a few of the temporal and spiritual blessings which Christ is ready to give to us if we earnestly and prayerfully follow him.

Christ stands to-day in the first place as the willing deliverer from all temporal anxieties. He comes to us and says, "Friend, I will feed you; I will clothe you; I will house you for to-day." But this promise does not appeal to us very much. Why? Most of us know where to-day's dinners are to come from. But it is the dinner of to-morrow or of next week or of next year that is worrying us. Then Christ says: "I will not only guarantee you a full cupboard, a full wardrobe and a bed in which to sleep to-night, but I will promise you these temporal gifts as long as you live upon earth. I will promise them for you next winter, next year, ten, twenty, fifty years from now, if you are alive. I will promise you all these things if you will only trust me and live for me." Then we look up in wonder and say, "What, Lord, will thou take away from me this awful anxiety in reference to the future necessities of life if I trust thee?" Then Christ answers: "I will. Thus I will do for all my disciples who obey me." Then if we are true disciples of Christ we say: "O God, I thank thee for taking the responsibility of the future off my shoulders. I roll my heavy burdens down at thy feet." Are you and I ready to do this to Christ and accept him at his word?

Have not the business men of the province of the financial necessities of life been awfully hard to carry? During the first half of your business life most of your earnings went into bread and butter and meat and clothes and house rent. I read an address delivered some time ago by one of the most brilliant women of this country. She was making a plea for women to learn how to cook, so that they could reduce the expenses of the kitchen to the minimum. It a wife had to do her own cooking, then she should learn to do it economically. If she had hired servants, then by personal knowledge she should demand her cooks not to waste the food. Then this noted female speaker made this impressive statement: "Women, you would learn how to do your work in life well, for nearly four-fifths of all an average man's income is spent by his wife in meeting the butcher, the baker, the grocer, the clothier's bills and the house rent." Is not that a startling assertion? Yet it is true. For the first fifteen years of your business life practically all of your money was immediately spent to meet the bare physical necessities of your family's existence. No wonder as the money came in so slowly and went out so rapidly the sharp iron plow of care furrowed your face in early life and bleached your black hair into silver and gray.

But the old proverb says, "It is a long lane which has no turning." Though the lane of financial struggle was long, yet at last you reached it at last for almost every one. You cleared off most of your debts—yes, all of them. Your business began to succeed your outgo, although your domestic expenses were increasing every year. You were investing your money to bring forth its 6 per cent. annually when suddenly the cruel hand of the old lane had a turn. But, alas, like a boomerang, it turned so completely that it went around in a circle. It brought you to prosperity. Then, again, it flung you into financial bankruptcy. The mine became exhausted, or the real estate boom broke, or the manufacturing business languished. It is not now what it was, but to-day you are perhaps again a poor man. "Oh," you say to yourself, "I would only be sure that I would be able to meet my temporal wants next year as I am this year!" You can, brother, if you are sure if you wish to be sure. Christ says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you." Cannot you trust him? Will you not to-day roll over all that responsibility upon him? You may have financially failed, but God never fails. He will look after you when you are not able to look after yourself. Will you trust him now?

But food and clothing and house rent mean more to me than the bare necessities of life. They mean more than a mere treadmill existence and a perpetual grind. They mean more than emancipation from poverty and distress. They mean vast and unlimited resources. They are the symbols of great armies of men marshalled together as employes. They represent not only what we shall eat and wear and the houses in which we shall live, but they represent the food and the clothing we sell to others and the land which others are rent from us. In other words, they represent power, unlimited and mighty power.

Let me illustrate. I go out upon the hillsides of New Zealand. I see thousands upon thousands of sheep browsing there. I say to the owner of these countless sheep: "For what do you raise these sheep?" He says: "I raise my flocks everywhere." "I raise them for the wool," he answers. "What do you do with the wool?" "Why, I sell that to the English factories. If you were here in shearing time you would see hundreds of men and boys at work and shipped as the harvesters press the hay into bales for the market. Then after that wool reaches the factories it is cleaned and scoured and spun out into threads and woven into underwear and flannels and coats and vests and pants and dresses and cloaks. Why, that cost you have on to-day is made out of the wool of these thousands of yards of cloth come from the backs of my sheep three years ago." "Well, now, let here you are raising enough sheep to clothe the whole English army. You certainly are not raising all these sheep for your own use?" "No," he answers, "I am raising all these sheep for power. I am spending the mere question of my own livelihood. But the more sheep I own the more money I get and the more workmen I employ the more influence I have in the world and the more I am honored and looked up to as a successful capitalist." The great sheep owners of New Zealand pastures his thousands upon thousands of sheep for power. Many flocks are the symbols of man's influence over man. Great fields, great fields, great farms and herds of cattle, great farms and landed estates are the symbols not only of power but of wealth, of wealth and but of unlimited power and influence. Now, when Christ comes to us and says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you," he is practically saying: "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven, which is your first and chief concern, and I will take care of your temporal interests. All the wealth and power that it is well for you to have shall be given unto you. Only strive to do my work and seek to save men and serve me in your daily life."

Because the world at large does not recognize the infinite results of this power that does not prove that this power does not exist. The world has not recognized some of the mightiest men of the ages even in statecraft. The other day I was reading a most interesting article by Hannibal Hamlin on the United States Senate. With almost a century for his reference Mr. Hamlin declared that some of the mightiest Senators who influenced the legislation of his country were hardly known outside of their states and the Senatorial walls. Then he mentions some of them, whose names I had scarcely heard of before. There was Samuel R. Phelps, whom Daniel Webster declared to be one of the soundest and ablest men he ever knew" in public life. Then there were Senators Maguire and Badger of North Carolina and Senator Dixon H. Lewis of Alabama, who were universally looked upon supposed to be as large as his body, and that body tipped the scales at 500 pounds. These men were the world, were the great leaders of leaders, yet outside of Senatorial walls the public hardly knew their names. Every single life with the power of Christ's disciples. The world at large may not recognize the power of the Holy Spirit which is in us, but the power will be there. Christ will recognize it. Heaven will recognize it. Even the world will recognize it when we are able to bring sinful men and women in touch with Jesus Christ. Oh, ye men and women who long for power, will ye not take this text as his symbol, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you?" That means that the gift of the Holy Spirit can be yours.

But dull wardrobes and cupboards and assured businesses are symbolical

Sean come to find than often power. They represent mental and physical and spiritual development. They represent in one sense freedom from care. In the next sense they represent expansion, increased dome of forehead, healthful lungs, steady heartbeat. They represent all that is best and noblest in the physical and mental and spiritual domain. I cannot press home my thought better than by drawing two or three verbal pictures.

It is early morning, still almost dark, near Scranton, the queen city of the mining regions of Pennsylvania. In a little cabin a miner and his family are taking a hurried breakfast. At half-past 7 you can see the long lines of working people heading for the mines and the breakers. "Why are you taking your two boys along with you, Mr. Miner?" you ask. "It is too early for school yet. These boys are pale and thin. They do not get enough sunlight. You must let them stay home and get 'Study hard! Sunlight!' answers the miner. "These boys of mine do not go to school. They are earning their living the same as I am. We have a large family in this hut, and every one who can must go out and help to earn the food they eat, the clothing they wear and help pay the house rent.' "What! Do these boys work for a living?" Why, one of them is so small his dinner pail almost touches the ground as he carries it along!" "Yes, they work. All boys in miners' huts are compelled to work for their living." I go into the breaker, and there I find hundreds of little boys at work there picking out the good coal as it passes along by their side. The air is unhealthy. It is laying the foundations of the "miner's asthma." The hours are long and tiresome. The "breaker boys" who should now be at school and who would make fine men if it were not for the money question, are being stunted in their growth. Ah, the pity of it! Do you not see how the food question, the clothing question, the house rent question, can be an accursed bulwark against physical, mental, moral and spiritual development?

How often have we heard this statement made by men and women: "Oh, how I wish this daily bread question was not holding me in its vise. I know I am growing to look like my typewriting, or my yardstick, or my kitchen stove or my sewing table. How I would love to travel and see the wonders of the world. How I would love to make the great thoughts of the great books speak to me. How I would love to develop my painting talent or my musical talent or my natural history talent. But just as I was about to enter college father died. Mother was left penniless. Then I had to go to work to support a mere brother or sister, clothing, earning and house rent earning machine." Grasp you not the symbol? With the cupboard filled and the house renting question anxieties eliminated from your life, do you not see how in Christ you have gone out to seek and expand and come to the full physical and mental and spiritual and moral development for which God made you?

Let us bring this lesson a little nearer home. For thirty years you have consecrated your life to money making. At first you said you had to do it to make a living. Now you are seduced by your mercenary habits have the mastery of you. You have every penny you can. You are a miser. Your face shows it. Your mind, your body, your whole life is warped. You cannot enjoy a picture gallery. Music is to you a perfect bore. The only columns you love to read are the stock market columns. You are a mere money making machine. Now, compare your developed life to that of a man like Dwight L. Moody. He had all the capabilities of financial success. He had them in greater measure than you had. But one day he turned his back upon the store and went and knelt in his bedroom and said: "Lord, I have given up to thee. I shall follow thee and thee alone. Thy will is to be my will." Was he not developed? Was he not developed in a better way than by cringing before the shrines of Midas' golden image?

Lastly, the struggle for the necessities of life represents for some men the great barriers between us and the sweet scented gardens of happiness. It is nearly always a struggle. Even the workingman's overalls cast aside. Inevitably we picture that time in the future when we will have amassed enough money to retire from business. Then we will buy a home in some suburban town; then we will have that large home always opened to our friends and our relatives; then we will expect the children and the grandchildren to come and visit us and stay as long as they can. Oh, yes; food and clothes and a free homestead represent not only a peaceful old age, but a happy youth, a happy manhood. And why should not this be so? Can you find any exhilaration of joy more satisfying and transcendent than that of serving Christ? If you and I want true happiness we do not need to look it in a strange land. We truly can find it in Jesus. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all this happiness will be added unto you."

We should be ready to seek this divine happiness at any cost, as was Dr. Ken, who afterward became the bishop of Bath and Wells. Dr. Ken at the time was living in Winchester. To that town came the Restless Charles on his flight from his rebellious people. In this court he brought along the notorious and yet beautiful Rahab, Nell Gwynn. The King bade her occupy the village rectory while he was there. In reply Dr. Ken said, "Never shall a person of the character of Nell Gwyn lodge under my roof." The court was horrified. The church leaders declared that this Episcopalian priest had signed his ecclesiastical death warrant." But a short time after the bishopric of Bath and Wells became vacant. The English Premier had a long list of prominent clergymen which he presented to the King for the appointment. Charles brushed these names aside as he said: "No, none of them shall have it. What is the name of that little man at Winchester who refused to let Nell Gwyn lodge in his house? Well, Dr. Ken shall have it. I have resolved that any man who will not bow the knee to Baal shall have the next bishopric which fell vacant if it had been Canterbury itself." So to Dr. Ken was his mansion by his willingness to commit ecclesiastical suicide for right's sake God presented us when we are willing to surrender all for him.

Christ will first seek him and his righteousness he promises all things. Yes, all good things will be added unto him. Then we shall have the temporal necessities supplied. Then we shall have the Holy Spirit's power. Then we shall have mental, physical, moral and spiritual development. Then we shall have the peace which passeth all understanding. Then we shall have heaven this side of the grave and heaven beyond. Anxious ones, seek ye first Christ and his righteousness and all these things added unto you?

Solder For Aluminium.

A solder for aluminium has been invented, it is stated, by Consul Alwell of Bombaix, by Fernand Hecht, a mechanic of that city. With a soldering iron he first tins the two pieces of iron, metal or join aluminium to copper, brass or iron. The invention is simple, no acids or salts being used.

WEAK KIDNEYS.

RESTORED TO STRENGTH BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Bad blood is the cause of weak kidneys. Impure particles of the blood clog the kidneys so that they are unable to perform their work of separating the waste matter from the blood—the bad from good. The symptoms of this condition are easily overcome. The dull sunken eye, the coated tongue, the backache, weak and aching knees, sallow, swollen face all show how the kidneys are failing and should not be neglected. Every day delayed but lessens the chance for a speedy cure. Then we shall have reached the incurable stage. Don't trust to a medicine which acts only on the kidneys, it may relieve, but never cures. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will be permanently cured must be treated. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will benefit your health—make life itself—to this end. Mrs. Sidney Rogers, Ashdod, Ont., who reaches with his uncle, Mr. C. E. Marchant, Napanee, Ont., and Mr. Marchant says, "My nephew, Roy Rogers, was a sufferer from kidney trouble. He took the measles and this left him in a bad way. The kidneys were so weak that they were incapable of performing their functions. He suffered from backache, weakness and restlessness. He was forced to leave school. Our family doctor was unable to help him. Indeed he told me that Roy might never get well. Then Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were brought to our notice. We procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had already used them myself with great benefit and felt confident they would cure Roy. He took them for a while and continued their use until he had taken half dozen boxes, which fully cured him. He is now strongest and ruddiest lad in our section and neither study nor work about the farm seem to bother him. I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved him from a life of misery."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do just one thing—they make new, rich, red blood, which reaches every nerve and organ in the body. That is why this medicine cures such common ailments as anaemia, nervousness, neuralgia, rheumatism, indigestion, palpitation of the heart, pneumonia, headache, etc. Also, in men, which strike them in the prime of life. Many women and young girls miserable from ailments peculiar to their sex should find new health in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They are a specific for such troubles. Sold by all dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

Sunshine Furnace

The "Sunshine" furnace and "sunny" ways are synonymous.

The cold, dreary winter days can be made cheery and warm with a pure, healthful heat if you have a "Sunshine" furnace.

Is easier to operate, cleaner, uses less fuel and "shines" in many other ways over common furnaces.

Two shakers are used to shake the heavy, triangular-shaped grates. This just cuts the work of shaking down in half, besides being easier on the furnace than the old one-shaker style.

Clydesdales for Service.

JOE THE BANKER (3215)

This fine young horse is growing much in favor since his colts have shown up so good. His colts figured prominently at the fall fairs, and one owned by Mr. A. Y. Price, of Wesley, took first prize, with this dam (not a large mare), in the general purpose class at Napanee, Centreville and Tamworth. Joe is well muscled and a heavy-boned horse, a beautiful dapple brown with small star, has excellent feet and has proved a sure foal-getter.

There is, and always will be, a good demand for this class of horse, and if the breeders of to-day had a regular and adequate supply, a large sum of money would flow into the hands of the farmers.

We expect he will leave his groom's stable, Oak Flats, every Saturday morning to Moscow at night, where he will remain till Wednesday morning, then go to Joseph Yeomans' for noon, and W. A. Lasher's, Strathcona, for night; Thursday in Violet, Thorpe, and Camden East for night, returning home Friday noon, and on Saturday to Oak Flats, where he will remain till Monday morning.

NO VAR (3459)

Commonly known by his every-day name, "Sandy," has wintered well and seems in good healthy condition, and has never been over-driven, so should be fully as successful a getter this season as he has proven to be in the past one.

We have had a tempting offer to send this fine young horse to New York State for service by a gentleman who saw him there, but we have decided not to send him away, as the farmers here have given us a good patronage, and "Sandy" has a wide reputation as being one of the finest Clydesdales in Ontario. His colts are well and favorably known; some from ten to eleven months old sould not be bought for $100 each. Both head and feet are balanced the scales at 1,765 lbs. on April 19th.

He will go to George Dean's, Yarker, each Tuesday forenoon, returning at night; then go to Enterprise Wednesday afternoon and from there to Centreville Thursday forenoon and home for night, where he will remain the balance of the week.

Health and weather permitting we expect the above routes will be continued. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Parties disposing of their mares before foaling time will be responsible for insurance. Parties trying mares and not returning them must pay full insurance. Service fee payable at Moscow, without further notice, when there are reasonable signs of mares being in foal. Money sent by registered letter or money order at our risk.

They Cleanse the System Thoroughly.—Farmelee's Vegetable Pills clear the stomach and bowels of bilious matter, cause the excretory vessels to throw off impurities from the blood into the bowels and expel the deleterious mass from the body. Mrs. Newlywed—Nonsense! Why, there are until a dozen checks in my check book that I haven't used up yet.

They Advertise Themselves.—Immediately they were offered to the public, Dr. Fernelee's Vegetable Pills became popular because of the good report they made for themselves. Their reputation has grown, and they now rank among the first medicines for the use in attacks of dyspepsia and biliousness, complaints of the liver and kidneys, rheumatism, fever and ague and the innumerable ailments to which these ailments give rise.

Miss Chilleigh—No, I never go skating. The cold makes my teeth chatter so.

One Sunday two small boys were industriously digging in the garden when a man who was passing stopped to give them a lecture.

"Don't you know that it is a sin to dig on Sunday unless it is a case of necessity?"

"Yes, sir," timidly replied one of the boys.

"Then, why don't you stop it?"

"Cause this is a case of necessity," replied the little philosopher. "A feller can't fish without bait."

Cucumbers and melons are "forbidden fruit" to many persons so constituted that the least indulgence is followed by attacks of cholera, dysentery, gripping, etc. Such persons are not aware that they can indulge to their heart's content if they keep on hand a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Dysentery Cordial, a medicine that will give immediate relief, and is sure cure for all summer complaints.

Wife—I'm sorry to see you come home in such a state as this, Charles Husband—I knew you were, my dear Carrie, and that's why I told you not to sit up.

The Suitor — What are all those men's photos for?

The Belle—Oh, that's my collection of souvenir spoons.

"John," said the distinguished lawyer, severely, "have you been remembering so nearly in the mean, in spite of my express prohibition?"

"Father," said John, promptly, "is it not one of the first principles of law that no witness is bound to incriminate himself?"

"I've got to practice on the piano five hours a day," said the disconsolate small girl.

"What for?"

"Cause mother and father don't like our new neighbors."

"Your fiance, the doctor, seems to be very absent minded."

"He is. Whenever he takes my hand, instead of squeezing it, he feels my pulse."

Addressing a political gathering the other day a speaker gave his hearers a tough old story. "If my children," he said, "brushing away a not unmanly tear, had become lost, the old faces I used to shake hands with."

Assistant—What shall I put under the bride's picture? She's formerly as a maid fence.

Editor—In that case we always say "accomplished."

A man was before a Tukesbury court the other day charged with stealing some fancy ducks. The magistrate languidly listened to the fanciful, long description of the man's property, sniffed the air, and then remarked:

"Why, those ducks can't be so very valuable—not such a great breed—I have some of them in my own yard."

The complainant turned red and explained:

"I stated, your Honor, that the ducks found in the prisoner's possession were not the only ones I'd raised."

DROPPED ALL OTHERS.

"I dropped all kinds of medicine I had Nervilene because I found Nerviline the quickest to relieve pain," writes E. B. Trenton, of St. John's. "If my children and myself get sick, Nerviline cures them. If a case of cramps or stomach ache happens in my family, we use Nerviline for neuralgia, rheumatism, lame back, sprains, colds and pains; it's as good as any doctor." The great Canadian remedy for pain. Nerviline has been Folson's Nerviline—nothing better made.

Consecration of S. Mary Magdalene's.

negotiated, all present were invited to sign their names in an album in which it is proposed to write a record of the proceedings connected with the consecration and some history of the parish from the earliest days down. A number of photographs and prints of historical character are on exhibition during the evening, including views of the old church and portraits of many of the Clergy and Bishops who have been connected, more or less directly, with our parish in days gone by.

It was the intention to have had addresses from others of the Clergy and Laity present, but the hour was getting late, and there were many presentations to be made against the progress of the proceedings were brought to a close.

On Friday, after the arrival of the G.T.R. train from the west, with a large contingent of Clergy, including the Lord Bishop, and of faithful laity not a few, the Consecration service was begun. During the assembling of the congregation voluntaries were played upon the new organ which received great admiration both for organ and organist. The latter gave a recital on his own organ—and so he ought—but that Bigotted was preserved that could be so without disparagement to the "Lion" himself, and that there are some fine instruments in the city.

The procession formed in the school room in due order, the cross leading preceded by the choir banner of the Clergy, followed by the Church-wardens and their solicitor, Mr. Geo. Reid with the Bishop and his Chaplains bringing up the rear.

Entrance was made at the principal entrance to the church, and the Rector called upon the senior warden, Dr. Hagan to read the usual "Petition of Consecration" which was expressed in the following language, "I (or we) the officers of the church and others representing the congregation, the Bishop graciously assented, and proceeded at once to commence the formal prayer of the petition. The proceedings then advanced towards the chancel singing the xxiv Psalm, the words of which "Lift up your heads O ye gates and be ye up your heads o ye gates and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors and the King of Glory shall come in."

The Bishop being seated in his officiating chair, the solicitor, Mr. G. F. Reid, advanced to him and presented the "Instrument of Donation" and Church Deed, whereupon the Bishop declared having jurisdiction to proceed to the sentence of Consecration. This was read in a most impressive manner by Archdeacon McIlwrin, from another engrossed document, which was then presented to the Bishop for his signature by Mr. Chalmers, church warden, and if too was placed before the Altar, and ordered to be deposited in the Diocesan Registry Office for safe keeping.

The 84th Introit (Hymn 219, in part adapted for the occasion), a solemn Invocation of the Holy Ghost was followed, the Bishop being Celebrant and his Chaplains, Rev. Canon Jones acting as Deacon and Sub-Deacon. The sermon was preached by the Venerable Archdeacon Bogert, now at the ripe age of 84, but who twenty-five years ago, closed his ministry of nineteen years as priest of this parish. The text was the one which is in illuminated scroll over the chancel arch, "This house preaching Reverence and Godly fear to many a generation of worshippers, "O worship the Lord in the Beauty of Holiness."

At the conclusion of the service, which was choral throughout, the Creed, Hymn 379 being sung as the recessional.

Shortly after being a fast day, the Bishop was pleased to grant a dispensation to the parish and its visitors for the occasion, and many plain and family re-unions were celebrated throughout the parish during the afternoon. The Bishop and Clergy were entertained to a sumptuous dinner by Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Miller, at their handsome residence on Dundas street.

The officers of the church being invited to a share in their generous hospitality. Congratulatory speeches were delivered by the Bishop, Archdeacon Carey and others, and the gathering was omitted to make the function most enjoyable.

At Choral Evensong the Bishop held his annual visitation of the Parish, and as his first Episcopal act in the newly consecrated church, administered the rite of Confirmation to a large class of Hands,' to twenty-six candidates presenting many adults. The Bishop preached one of his most impressive sermons on confirmation, from the text, "Have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed." The solemn section which his remarks carried, will be manifest when next visits the parish on a similar mission.

Thus ended this great Red Letter Day, to use a hackneyed but expressive term) of the Parish. Let us pray that its influence may not soon pass away.

The church and school room were beautifully decorated with ferns and flowers by a committee of ladies, assisted by the children of the Sunday School, and at the last moment a permanent oak floor was laid in the sanctuary, adding greatly to its dignity. Much regret was felt that the new bell, the bequest of Miss Fralick, did not arrive in time to be used in the Consecration service, also for gift of the Communion, which, by a happy coincidence, fell on the anniversary of her "natal dimitis."

If your stomach troubles you do not make the mistake that there is no cure for a great many have been permanently cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. Get a free sample at Red Cross Drug Store and give them a trial. They also cure constipation and biliousness. 22tf

New Remedy for Stomach Troubles That Will Cure.

In keeping with their custom of always ordering a supply of new remedies as soon as their value has been established, our leading druggists have now in stock a supply of Mi-o-na, a remedy for stomach troubles that absolutely cures and restores lost functions of the digestive organs.

Until recently it was thought that pain was the only valuable symptom of stomach troubles, but it is now known that while pepsin aids in digesting meats, it has no effect upon starchy foods, such as potatoes, rice, bread, corn meal, etc. As the, majority of people suffer trouble from indigestion of starchy foods, this makes pepsin absolutely useless in most cases.

Mi-o-na, on the contrary, not only contains no pepsin, acts directly upon the gastric glands, restores the lost vitality of the digestive organs and revives flagging nutrition, aids in assimilation of food, and in fact strengthens the whole digestive system that you can eat anything at any time without fear of indigestion.

Dyspepsia, heartburn, sick headache, headache, pain and distress after eating, debility are the result of a weak and faulty digestion. The Mi-o-na tablet relieves these symptoms well to overcome, and you will soon feel perfectly well.

Get a 50 cent box of Mi-o-na tablets to-day.

If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na from your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Mi-o-na is not a secret patent medicine from a leading stomach specialist but is a scientific preparation. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N.Y.

TIGERS OF THE DEEP.

By a Barnum.

'Tis the dead calm after a storm. The oily sea appears as if lifeless and stagnant, and the ripple upon the face of the waters, not a dancing wavelet but a glittering shimmer of light on the leaden surface. Ing only the glowing full orbed reflection of the blazing sun ever head in the zenith. The sky is of the same dull, gray glorious azure faded to a dead iron tone, and not a cloud, not a wisp of fleecy vapour, nor a flimy tuft or curve to break the many monotony of the seething fiery atmosphere is as motionless as death, and as torpid and as inert as in a lethargic trance.

Immovable though anchored to a rock, the fore-mast sail hanging limp and motionless, is a hastily constructed raft, upon which are assembled half a score of shipwrecked mariners, gaunt and cadaverous, their glaring eyeballs sunk deep, and gripping hunger and thirst stamped unmistakably upon them, depicting and emaciated countenances. The last leg of water has been husbanded, and the last tin of biscuits has been opened and the grim relics of starvation stare them full in the face. One by one they lie down famished and hopeless never to rise from that couch of death, never again to taste of the delights and revel in the pleasure of life and to open their eyes of its terrified sufferers. And now having tasted blood the entire shoal is furiously plunging and leaping around the raft, the hideous monsters gathering ever more and more audacity, one of the wretched men, indistinctly vanishing too near the edge being seized bodily by one of the gigantic sharks and forthwith sepulchred in its repulsive, voracious maw, and so it goes on, until half the wretched crew have succumbed, and the last can be the inevitable devourers, when the survivors seeing death happily rescued by a passing ship from the grim horror of that living death.

And there are other relentless foes, ever seeking whom they may devour, and ever ready to drag their fair victims down to perdition. But those who make up their minds that as for them they will serve the Almighty, and who, trust in the atonement made for them by the Redeemer for the entire remission of their iniquities, with His never-refused aid live a godly life, and resisting Evil and fortified for those assaults, until they reach that land where these spiritual enemies for ever cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.

Is Baby Plump, Rosy and "Good"?

That is the normal condition of a healthy baby. If your baby is thin, pale and peevish there is something radically wrong, and ten to one the trouble is with the food. Either the food is lacking in nourishing qualities, or, being unsuitable, is not assimilated, and, as a consequence, baby is miserable and fails to thrive.

What is absolutely necessary in such a case is a concentrated and nourishing food, and, at the same time, easily digested.

The ideal infant food is

FERROL

Phosphorized Oil and Iron—the original and only combination of Oil with Iron and Phosphorus. Babies like FERROL, it always agrees with them, and never fails to give the most gratifying results.

FERROL is absolutely the only Infant Food which develops every part of the system: Phosphorized Oil, the most valuable food known, to build up the tissue and muscle; Iron to enrich the blood; and Phosphorus, for the development of bone, nerve and brain.

If you wish to have a strong, healthy baby, do not fail to use FERROL—the result will amaze you.

The grocer complains if the farmer or the roadside patron goes to Toronto or to outside points for an article he can get at his home store as cheap, but he does not hesitate to buy flour, from miles and hundreds of miles away, and sell you an inferior flour at the more money than the purchase of the home product for, every bag which is guaranteed.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"Please, pa," pleaded Bobby, "just one more."

"All right," said pa, closing his book.

Well, say, pa," began Bobby, "who is going to bury the last man that died?"

They Cleanse the System Thoroughly.—Farmelee's Vegetable Pills clear the stomach and bowels of bilious matter, cause the excretory vessels to throw off impurities from the blood into the bowels and expel the deleterious mass from the body. They do this without pain or inconvenience to the patient, who speedily realizes their good offices as soon as they begin to take effect. They have strong recommendations from all kinds of people.

Mrs. Newlywed, angrily—I just received a silly notice from you that my account is overdrawn.

Cashier—Yes, madam, that seems to be the case.

Mrs. Newlywed—Nonsense! Why, there are until a dozen checks in my check book that I haven't used up yet.

They Advertise Themselves.—Immediately they were offered to the public, Dr. Fernelee's Vegetable Pills became popular because of the good report they made for themselves. Their reputation has grown, and they now rank among the first medicines for the use in attacks of dyspepsia and biliousness, complaints of the liver and kidneys, rheumatism, fever and ague and the innumerable ailments to which these ailments give rise.

Miss Chilleigh—No, I never go skating. The cold makes my teeth chatter so.

Miss Warmley—Oh, take them out and come along.

Mrs. Dolan, boastfully—Mrs. Carey, the woife of the rich grower, called on me to-day.

Mrs. Nolan—Well, well, d'ye mo'nd that, now! I wonder phwat the divil they t' be makin' his wolfe collect his bad bills.

It is Good for Man and Beast.—Not only is Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil of immeasurable value in the household, but the farmer and stockmen will find it very serviceable for the lame yard and on the rattle range, often saving the life of a valuable animal. Cures in injuries to stock and in cases of cough and pains it can be used with good effect.

Willie—Papa, if I was twins would you buy the other boy a banana, too? Papa—Certainly, my son.

Willie—Well, papa, you surely ain't going to check dem bananas 'cause my nana just 'cause I'm all in one piece.

Bella—That's true; a man who forgets to bring candy home makes me as tired as a man who doesn't.

Holloway's Corn Cure is a specific for the most obstinate corns and warts. We have never heard of its failing to remove even the worst kind.

One Sunday two small boys were industriously digging in the garden when a man who was passing stopped to give them a lecture.

"Don't you know that it is a sin to dig on Sunday unless it is a case of necessity?"

"Yes, sir," timidly replied one of the boys.

"Then, why don't you stop it?"

"Cause this is a case of necessity," replied the little philosopher. "A feller can't fish without bait."

Cucumbers and melons are "forbidden fruit" to many persons so constituted that the least indulgence is followed by attacks of cholera, dysentery, gripping, etc. Such persons are not aware that they can indulge to their heart's content if they keep on hand a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Dysentery Cordial, a medicine that will give immediate relief, and is sure cure for all summer complaints.

Wife—I'm sorry to see you come home in such a state as this, Charles Husband—I knew you were, my dear Carrie, and that's why I told you not to sit up.

The Suitor — What are all those men's photos for?

The Belle—Oh, that's my collection of souvenir spoons.

"John," said the distinguished lawyer, severely, "have you been remembering so nearly in the mean, in spite of my express prohibition?"

"Father," said John, promptly, "is it not one of the first principles of law that no witness is bound to incriminate himself?"

"I've got to practice on the piano five hours a day," said the disconsolate small girl.

"What for?"

"Cause mother and father don't like our new neighbors."

"Your fiance, the doctor, seems to be very absent minded."

"He is. Whenever he takes my hand, instead of squeezing it, he feels my pulse."

Addressing a political gathering the other day a speaker gave his hearers a tough old story. "If my children," he said, "brushing away a not unmanly tear, had become lost, the old faces I used to shake hands with."

Assistant—What shall I put under the bride's picture? She's formerly as a maid fence.

Editor—In that case we always say "accomplished."

A man was before a Tukesbury court the other day charged with stealing some fancy ducks. The magistrate languidly listened to the fanciful, long description of the man's property, sniffed the air, and then remarked:

"Why, those ducks can't be so very valuable—not such a great breed—I have some of them in my own yard."

The complainant turned red and explained:

"I stated, your Honor, that the ducks found in the prisoner's possession were not the only ones I'd raised."

DROPPED ALL OTHERS.

"I dropped all kinds of medicine I had Nervilene because I found Nerviline the quickest to relieve pain," writes E. B. Trenton, of St. John's. "If my children and myself get sick, Nerviline cures them. If a case of cramps or stomach ache happens in my family, we use Nerviline for neuralgia, rheumatism, lame back, sprains, colds and pains; it's as good as any doctor." The great Canadian remedy for pain. Nerviline has been Folson's Nerviline—nothing better made.

negotiated, all present were invited to sign their names in an album in which it is proposed to write a record of the proceedings connected with the consecration and some history of the parish from the earliest days down. A number of photographs and prints of historical character are on exhibition during the evening, including views of the old church and portraits of many of the Clergy and Bishops who have been connected, more or less directly, with our parish in days gone by.

It was the intention to have had addresses from others of the Clergy and Laity present, but the hour was getting late, and there were many presentations to be made against the progress of the proceedings were brought to a close.

On Friday, after the arrival of the G.T.R. train from the west, with a large contingent of Clergy, including the Lord Bishop, and of faithful laity not a few, the Consecration service was begun. During the assembling of the congregation voluntaries were played upon the new organ which received great admiration both for organ and organist. GREAT PASTORAL COMEDY.

The "Joshua Simpkins" company, carrying their own special scenery, a band of music and fine orchestra, will produce the great pastoral comedy drama of that name at Brisco Opera House, Thursday, June 14th. The piece deals with country life and people, three acts of the play being laid in one of the many quaint villages of Vermont. The second act (in three scenes) portrays Uncle Josh's first visit to Washington City. In the third act a sensational saw mill effect is shown, being nothing more or less than a complete saw mill in full operation, cutting up genuine timber. The saw is a genuine buzz or circular saw, and cuts through timber at lightning speed. Plan at Hawley's. Prices, 25, 35 and 50 cents.

ST. ALBAN'S CHURCH, ODESSA.

Saturday, June 2d, brought to a happy consummation the long struggle and hopeful perseverance of this little congregation, when they witnessed the consecration of their beloved church of St. Alban the Martyr, Odessa. The ceremony was performed by the Lord Bishop of the Diocese, Rt. Rev. Wm. Lennox Mills, D.D., assisted by the following clergy:—Venerable Archdeacon Carey and Macmorine, Rev. Canons Jarvis, Jacobs and Stiest, Rural Dean Allen, Revds. F.D. Woodcock, A. H. Creggan, C. A. French, T. F. Dowdall and Rural Dean Dibb, incumbent of the church. The church was purchased from the Episcopal Methodist in 1889 during the incumbency of Rev. W.M.A. Burgoyne, now Rector and Rural Dean of Renfrew, who was an honored guest on this occasion. The consecration ceremony was followed by a most impressive sermon by Ven. Archdeacon Macmorine, and the administration of Holy Confirmation or the Laying on of Hands, and Celebration of the Holy Eucharist. The Bishop and clergy and visitors from Newburgh and Yarker were then given a sumptuous luncheon by the ladies of the congregation in Jubilee Hall, kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. Toomey. Short speeches of congratulation followed and regret was expressed at the unavoidable absence of Mr. E. J. B. Pense, M.P.P., who had liberally befriended the mission in its early days of struggle. Mr. and Mrs. Charbonneau remained over Sunday and were cordially welcomed by their many old friends. The former preached earnestly and eloquently to large congregations, urging the faithful to continued effort for the maintenance and aforementioned God's Holy Temple in the outward structure and in their own hearts and lives.

OBITUARY.

JANE ELIZABETH CARSCALLEN.

Was the youngest daughter of Isaiel Vrooman and Ebenezer Perry, and was born in the Township of Ernestown, near the Village of Morven, on October 28th, 1834.

Left motherless at the age of seventeen, she filled the mother's place to her younger brothers, the youngest of whom was but two years of age at the time, and so faithfully and well did she fill this place that the brothers who survive her, look back with gratitude on her loving care of them in their childhood.

She was married in Napanee on Oct. 3d, 1857, to Peter Fraser Carscallen, of Tamworth, coming at once to the Village of Tamworth, where she resided until 1868, when they moved to a farm on the shore of Beaver Lake, about two miles from Tamworth. Here they continued to reside until December, 1905, when Mr. Carscallen retired from the farm, returning to Tamworth to spend their declining years, but Mrs. Carscallen was not destined to remain long in the new home. She had been gradually failing in health for some time, and on Sunday morning, March 18th, 1906 she was suddenly taken ill of pneumonia, accompanied by a slight stroke of paralysis, and despite all that loving hearts could plan for her or willing hands do, she passed away to a brighter and better world on Wednesday evening, at 10.30. She suffered intensely through her four days illness, but was patient and uncomplaining, as it was ever her nature to be. Her faculties were clear and bright to the last, and she said goodbye to the dear ones gathered about her, fully conscious that she was leaving them "for a little while."

She was the mother of ten children, three of whom preceded her to the better land while in infancy. Four sons and three daughters survive her. They are as follows: Sol, on the farm; Will, a doctor, formerly at the Klondyke, now at home; Frank, a lawyer, also in the Klondyke; Fred, in Kingston; Alberta, at home; Grace, now Mrs. F. McTeer, of Haliburton, and Mabel, teaching school near home. Of those the two elder sons and all the daughters were present to be with her during her illness and death and are left to cherish their sacred lonely home. She is also survived by one sister, Mrs. W. Church, of Marysville, and five brothers, Edward Perry, Centreville; David Perry, Marysville; Thomas Perry, Myers' Cave; Wm. Perry, Tamworth, and Jas. Perry, Mountain View, Alta.

Mrs. Carscallen was converted in the fall of 1866, under the preaching of Rev. A. D. Traveller, now of Chicago, remaining throughout her life a faithful consistent Christian. In disposition she was quiet and retiring, making few intimate friends, but those who knew her well and were favored to enjoy her friendship felt that in her they had one of the truest friends. She was devoted to the home and family, loving our old Bible and was always the same gentle loving wife and mother, and the vacant place in the hearts and home can never be filled.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. W. H. Graham, at the Methodist church, Tamworth, some of her favorite hymns being sung, "Crown Him Lord of all," "Oh! How Happy are they," "Rock of Ages," "Saved by Grace", being among them. At the close of the service her body was taken to the vault to await interment, and on Friday afternoon, April 20th, all that was mortal of our dear one was laid to rest in Tamworth Methodist cemetery, there to await the resurrection morning. As the bereaved ones turned away from the grave of the dear mother, their heart echoed the words of one of the hymns sung at her funeral:

"Asleep in Jesus—blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep,
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the tare of foes.
Asleep in Jesus, oh, for me
May such a blessed refuge be,
Securely may I rest there,
Waiting the summons from on high."

Deceased was well and favorably known here and leaves besides his widow two sons and two daughters to mourn the loss of a kind and loving father. The funeral service was conducted at the house by the Rev. W. Jones.

SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN

A Canadian Author now in India.

In Simla, that famous India town, perched on a ridge connecting two peaks of the Himalayas and half-hidden by its wealth of tall dark firs—a town that Rudyard Kipling admires so much as no other town has ever been—lives Mrs. Everard Charles Cotes, the popular Canadian writer, better known by her maiden name, Sara Jeanette Duncan.

Mrs. Cotes was born in Brantford, Ont., in 1862, the eldest daughter of Charles Duncan, Esq., and received her education in the public schools and the Collegiate Institute of her native town. She tried teaching for a time, but soon discovered that she had talent for writing which was clamoring for development, so she bade the children good-bye with pathos in her voice but a feeling of joyous relief in her heart and started into literature. Some two literary successes in a single bold, brilliant charge; to others the publishers and public surrender only after a long, hard siege—as Mrs. Cotes found it. Her verse and prose seemed to have the unerring instinct of the homing pigeon, for wherever she sent them they always came back. Then she determined to enter literature by its back door—journalism. She wrote a series of syndicate letters about the New Orleans Cotton Centennial which she actually sold. Then, after a period of editorial training on the "Washington Post" she returned to Toronto and contributed to Canadian papers. Her work as parliamentary correspondent of the "Montreal Star" attracted attention and a decidedful success for "The Week" during 1887-88. In 1888, when Miss Lily Lewis she made a trip around the world, writing syndicate articles along the way and in 1890 first hit the target of literary success with her unconventional book of travels "A Social Departure: How Orthodosia and I Went Round the World," the first of her ten or more books, all breezy, chatty stories that reflect her personality as naturally as a rose-jar suggests roses.

While girdling the earth she found what determined her life. She met in Calcutta, Mr. Cotes, a professor who had a scientific connection with the Indian Museum and had won reputation in his special field of research, Indian entomology. She returned to Canada, but in 1891 they were married and Mrs. Cotes went back to India. Her writing has vivacity, wit, humor, brilliancy and the charm of frank naturalness, with the happy knack of hitting off a character or a scene in a few vivid strokes, the same characteristic that makes Kipling's sketches so real, graphic and seemingly spontaneous. In India Mrs. Cotes has been engaged in journalistic and general literary work, and this transplanted Canadian has lost none of her sparkle, energy and charm in the new life and romantic setting of Old India.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by W. C. Hunt, at the Department of Agriculture.

SARA JEANNETTE DUNCAN
A Canadian Author now in India.

In Simla, that famous India town, perched on a ridge connecting two peaks of the Himalayas and half-hidden by its wealth of tall dark firs—a town that Rudyard Kipling mentioned as no other has ever before—Sara Jeannette Duncan, Mrs. Everard Charles Cotes, the popular Canadian writer, better known by her maiden name, Sara Jeanette Duncan.

Mrs. Cotes was born in Brantford, Ont., in 1862, the eldest daughter of Charles Duncan, Esq., and received her education in the public schools and the Collegiate Institute of her native town. She tried teaching for a time, but soon discovered that she had talent for writing which was clamoring for development, so she bade the children good-bye with pathos in her voice but a feeling of joyous relief in her heart and started into literature. Some ten literary sorties in a single bold, brilliant charge; to others the publishers and public surrender only after a long, hard siege—as Mrs. Cotes found it. Her verse and prose seemed to have the unerring instinct of the homing pigeon, for wherever she sent them they always came back. Then she determined to enter literature by its back door—journalism. She wrote a series of syndicate letters about the New Orleans Cotton Centennial which she actually sold. Townsh, after a year's course of additional training on the "Montreal Post" she returned to Toronto and contributed to Canadian papers. Her work as parliamentary correspondent of the "Montreal Star" attracted attention and some delightful essays for the "Week" were the result. In 1888, with Miss Lily Lewis she made a trip around the world, writing syndicate articles for not less than a dozen papers, and this transplanted Canadian has lost none of her sparkle, energy and charm in the new life and romantic setting of old India.

There is only one way to know whether all the good things said about Zutoo Tablets are true, and that is to try them.

If half what is said about this headache defier and tonic, the tablets should be in every home and office, in every ladies' purse and gentleman's pocket.

And yet, not one individual after trial, has ever said that they are over praised.

HOW TO BREAK UP A COLD.

It may be a surprise to many to learn that a severe cold can be completely broken up in one to two days' time. The first symptoms of a cold are a dry, loud cough, then profuse watery discharge from the nose, and chills, while coating on the tongue. When Chamberlain's cough remedy is taken every hour on the first appearance of these symptoms, it counteracts the effect of the cold and restores the system to a healthy condition within a day or two. The BRETHREN

By Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," Etc.

Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

"How is that, lady, seeing that you are said to be the niece of Salah-ed-din? Are these knights, then, the nephews of Salah-ed-din?"

"Nay," answered Rosamund, "they are my father's sons, but of another wife."

The answer appeared to satisfy Sinan, who fixed his eyes upon the pale beauty of Rosamund and asked no more questions. While he remained thus thinking, a noise arose at the end of the terrace, and the brethren, turning their heads, saw that the thick-set knight was striving to thrust his way through the guards who stood by the curtains and barred his path with the shafts of their spears. Then it came into Godwin's mind that just before Rosamund unveiled he had seen this knight suddenly turn and walk down the terrace.

The lord Sinan looked up at the sound and made a sign. Then the men of the dais sprang to their feet and ran towards the curtain, where they spoke with the knight, who burst in and came back with them, though slowly, as one who is unwilling. Now his hood had fallen from his head, and Godwin and Wulf stared at him as he advanced, for surely they knew those great shoulders, those round black eyes, those thick lips, and that heavy jowl.

"Lozelle! It is Lozelle!" said Godwin.

"Ay," echoed Rosamund, "it is Lozelle, the double traitor, who betrayed me first to the soldiers of Saladin, and, because I would have none of his love, next to this lord Sinan."

Wulf heard, and, as Lozelle drew near to them, sprang at him with an oath and struck him across the face with his mailed hand. Instantly guards thrust themselves between them, and Sinan asked through Masouda:

"Why do you dare to strike this Frank in my presence?"

"Because, lord," answered Wulf, "he is a rogue who has brought all these troubles on our house. I challenge him to meet me in battle to the death."

"And I also," said Godwin.

"I am ready," shouted Lozelle, stung to fury by the blow.

"Then, dog, why did you run away when you saw our faces?" asked Wulf.

Masouda held up her hand and began to interpret, addressing Lozelle, and speaking in the first person as the "mouth" of Sinan.

"I thank you for your service who have served me before. Your messenger came, a Frank whom I knew in old days. As you arranged it should be, I sent one of my fedais with orders to kill the men of Salah-ed-din on the ship and capture this lady who is his niece, all of which service was to have been done. The bargain that your messenger made was that the lady should be given over to me—"

Here Godwin and Wulf ground their teeth and glared at Sinan.

"But these knights say that you stole her, their kinswoman, from them, and one of them has already publicly challenged you to single combat, which challenge you have accepted. I sanction this combat gladly, for I have long desired to see two knights of the Franks fight in tourney according to their custom. I will set the course, and you shall be given the best horse in my kingdom; this knight shall ride his own. These are the conditions of the course shall be on the bridge between the inner and outer gates of the castle, and the fight, which must be to the death, shall take place on the night of the full moon, which is, three days from now. If you are victor, we will talk of the matter of the lady for whom you bargained as a wife."

"My lord, my lord," answered Lozelle, "whose lay I dance on that terrible place in moonlight? Is it thus that you keep faith with me?"

"I can and will!" cried Wulf. "Dog, I would fight you in the gates of hell, with my soul on the hazard!"

"Keep him with yourself," said Sinan, "who said that you accepted the challenge of this knight and made no conditions, and now you have proved upon his body that his quarrel is not just, then speak of my faith with you. Nay, no more words; when this fight is done we will speak again, and not before. Let him be led to the outer castle and there given of our best. Let my black horse be brought to him that he may gallop in it, and fro upon the bridge, if there he will within the circuit of the walls, by day or by night; but see that he has no speech with this lady whom he has betrayed into my power, or with these knights his foes, nor suffer him to come into my presence. I will not talk with a man who has been struck in the face until he has washed away the blow in blood."

As Masouda finished translating, and before Lozelle could answer, the lord Sinan moved his head, whereon guards sprang forward and conducted Lozelle from the terrace.

"Brother, Sir Thief," cried Wulf after him, "till we meet again upon the narrow bridge and there settle our account. You have fought Godwin, perhaps you will have better luck with Wulf."

Lozelle glared back at him and, finding no answer, went on his way.

"Your report," said Sinan, addressing the tall fedai who all this while had lain upon his face before him still as the form that was stretched upon the bier. "There should have been another prisoner, the great emir Hassan. Also, where is the Frankish spy?"

The fedai rose and spoke.

"Lord," he said, "I did your bidding. The knight who has gone steered the ship into the bay, as had been arranged. I attacked with the daylight. The soldiers of Salah-ed-din fought bravely, for that lady here gave us, and gave them time to gather, and we lost many men. We overcame and killed them all, except the prince Hassan, whom we took prisoner. I left some men to watch the ship. The crew we spared, as they were the servants of the Frank Lozelle, setting them loose upon the beach, together with a Frankish woman, who was the servant of the lady here, to find their way to the nearest city. This woman I would have killed, but the lady your captive begged for her life, saying she had come from the land of the Franks to seek her husband; so, having no orders, I let her go. Yesterday morning we started for Masyaf, the prince Hassan riding in a litter together with that Frankish spy who was here a while ago, and told you of the coming of the ship. At night they slept in the same tent; I left the prince bound and the spy loose, but in the morning when we looked we found him gone—how, I know not—and lying in the tent the Frankish spy, dead, with a knife-wound through his heart. Behold!" and withdrawing the cloth from the stretcher he revealed the stiff form of the spy Nicholas, who lay there dead, a look of terror frozen on his face.

"At least this one has come to an end he deserved," muttered Wulf to Godwin.

"So having searched without avail, I came on here with the lady prisoner and the Frank Lozelle. I have spoken.

Now when he had heard this report, forgetting his calm, Sinan arose from the cushion and stepped forward two paces. There he halted, with fury in his glittering eyes, looking like a man clothed in a black bell. For a moment he stroked his beard, and the brethren noted that on the first finger of his right hand was a ring so like that which the knight who was lord of Godwin that none could have told them apart.

"Fool," said Sinan said in a low voice, "what have you done? You have let the emir Hassan go, who is the most trusted friend and general of the Sultan of Damascus. By now he is there, or near it, and within six days we shall see the army of Salah-ed-din riding across the plain. Also you have not killed the crew and the Frankish woman, and they too will make report of the taking of the ship and the capture of this lady, who is of the house of Salah-ed-din and whom he seeks more earnestly than all the kingdom of the Franks, for you have to say?"

"Lord," answered the tall fedai, and his hand trembled as he spoke, "most mighty lord, I have obeyed you to the killing of the crew from your lips, and the Frank Lozelle told me that he had agreed with you that no blood be spared."

"Then, slave," he lied, He agreed with me through that dead spy that they should be slain, and do you not know that if I give no orders in such a case I mean death, not life? But what of the prince Hassan?"

"Lord, I have nothing to say. I think he must have bribed the spy named Nicholas"—and he pointed to the corpse—"to cut his bonds, and afterwards killed the man for vengeance sake, for by the body we found a heavy purse of gold. That he hated him as he hated yonder Lozelle I know, for he called them dogs and traitors in the boat; and since he could not strike them, his hands being bound, he spat in their faces, cursing them in the name of Allah. That is why, Lozelle being afraid to be near him, I set the spy Nicholas to watch over him, and two soldiers outside the tent, while Lozelle and I watched the bow."

"Let those soldiers be brought," said Sinan, "and tell their story."

They were brought and stood by their captain, but they had no story to tell. They swore that they had not slept on guard, nor heard a sound, yet when morning came the prince was gone. Again the Lord of Death strok-ed his black beard, then he held up the Signet before the eyes of the three men, saying:

"You see the token. Go."

"Lord," said the fedai, "I have served you well for many years."

"Your service is ended. Go!" was the stern answer.

The fedai lowered his head in salute, stood for a moment as though lost in thought, then, turning suddenly, walked with a steady step to the edge of the abyss and leapt. For an instant the sunlight shone on his white and flattering robe, then from the bottom of that darksome place floated up the sound of a heavy fall, and all was still.

"Follow your captain to Paradise," said Sinan to the two soldiers, whose faces had grown ashen with fear. Then he turned to the brethren and addressed himself, but a fail sprang up, saying:

"Stay, would you shut blood before your wrath? Do you not know the oath I took?"

"Be your oath good, the first with

UNKNOWN FRIENDS.

There are many people who have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with splendid results, but who are unknown because they have hesitated about giving a testimonial for their experience for publication. These people, however, are now the less friends of this remedy. They have done much towards making it a household word by their personal recommendations to friends and neighbors. It is a good medicine to have in the home and is for sale by most all druggists in this place and all forms of bowel trouble. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 22tf a steady step, and the second, who was not so long resting over that brink of the precipice as one might who is drunken.

"It is finished," said the dais, clapping their hands gently. "Dread lord, we thank thee for thy justice."

But Rosamund turned sick and faint, and even the brethren paled. This man was terrible indeed—if he were a man and not a devil—and they were in his power. How long would it be, they wondered, before the three were bidden to walk that gulf? Only Wulf swore in his heart that if he went by this road Sinan should go with him.

Then the corpse of the false pahlevar was borne away to be thrown to the eagles which always hovered over that lonely tower, and Sinan, dismissing reseated himself upon the cushion, began to talk again through his "mouth" Masouda, in a low, quiet voice, as though nothing had happened to anger him.

"Lady," he said to Rosamund, "your story is known to me. Salah-ed-din seek you, nor is it wonderful"—here his eyes glittered with a new and horrible light—"that he should desire to see such lovliness at his court, although the Frank Lozelle swore through yonder dead spy that you are precious in his eyes because of some vision that has come to him. Well, this heretic sultan is my enemy whom Satan protects, for even my fedais have failed to kill him, and perhaps there will be war on account of you. But have no fear, for the price at which you shall be delivered to him is higher than Salah-ed-din himself would care to pay, even for you. So, since this castle is impregnable, here you may dwell at peace, nor shall any desire be denied you. Speak, and your wishes are fulfilled."

"I desire," said Rosamund in a low, steady voice, "protection against Sir Hugh Lozelle and all men."

"It is yours. The Lord of the Mountain swears you with his own mouth."

"I desire," she went on, "that my brothers here may lodge with me, that I may not feel alone among strange people."

He thought awhile and answered: "Your brethren shall lodge near you in the guest castle. Why not,' since from they you cannot need protection? They shall meet you at the feast and in the garden. But, lady, do you know if any dames have your faith of some old tale of a promise made by him who went before me to ask my hand for you from Salah-ed-din, unwitting that I was your host, not Salah-ed-din. That they should meet you thus is a chance which makes even my wisdom wonder, for in it I see omens. Now she whom they wished to free from Salah-ed-din, these tall brethren of yours might wish to rescue from Al-je-bal. Understand them, all of you, that from the Lord of Death there is but one escape. Yonder runs its path," and he pointed to the bridge, "whence his three servants had leapt to their doom.

"Knights," he went on, addressing Godwin and Wulf, "lead your sister hence. This evening I bid her, and you, to my banquet, which is the 'Feast of Woman,' he added to Masouda, "accompany them. You know your duties; this lady is to be treated as a sister that no strange man comes near her—above all, the Frank Lozelle. Dais, take notice and let it be proclaimed

"To these three is given the protection of the Signet in all thing, save that they must not have my walls except under sanction of the Signet—nay, in its very presence."

The dais rose, bowed, and seated themselves again. Then, guided by Masouda and preceded and followed by guards, the brethren and Rosamund walked down the terrace through the curtains into the chancel-like place where men crouched upon the ground; through the great hall where more men crouched upon the ground; through the ante-chamber where, at a word from Masouda, the guards saluted; through passages to that place where they had slept. Here Masouda halted and said:

"Lady Rose of the World, who are fitly so named, I go to prepare your chamber. Doubtless you will wish to speak awhile with these your brothers. Speak on and fear not, for it shall be here, where you are left alone, if only for a little, while. Yet walls have ears, so I counsel you use that English tongue which none of us understand in the land of Al-je-bal—not even I."

Then she bowed and went.

CHAPTER XIII.

The brethren and Rosamund looked

They are as easily digested by the child and invalid as by the sturdy workman. They contain ALL the food properties of finest Canadian wheat flour, in a form that delights the appetite. at each other, for having so much to say it seemed that they could not speak at all. Then with a low cry Rosamund said:

"Oh! let us thank God. Who, after all these black months of travel and of danger, has thus brought us together again," and, kneeling down, they joined together in the guest-hall of the lord of Death, they gave thanks earnestly enough.

Then, moving to the centre of the chamber where they thought that none would hear them, they began to speak in low voices and in English.

"Tell your tale first, Rosamund," said Godwin.

She told it as shortly as she could, they listening without a word.

Then Godwin spoke and told her theirs. Rosamund heard it, and asked a question almost in a whisper.

"Why does that beautiful dark-eyed woman befriend you?"

"I do not know," answered Godwin, "unless it is because of the accident of my having saved her from the lion."

Rosamund looked at him and smiled a little, and Wulf smiled also, then she said:

"Blessings be on that lion and all its tribe! I pray that she may not soon forget the deed, for it seems that our lives hang upon her favor. How strange also that you should have come on hither against her counsel, which, seeing what we have, I think was honest?"

"We were led," answered Godwin, "first by our father's wisdom at his death, and saw what we could not see."

"Ay," added Wulf, "but I would that it had been into some other place, for I fear this lord Al-je-bal at whose nod men hurl themselves to death."

"He is hateful," answered Rosamund, with a shudder; "worse even than the knight Lozelle, and when he fixes his eyes on me, my heart grows sick. Oh! that we could escape from this place!"

"An eel in an oster trap has more chance of freedom," said Wulf gloomily. "Yet us at least he thankfully keeps, we are caged together—for how long, I wonder?"

As he spoke Masouda appeared, attended by waiting women, and, bowing to Rosamund, said:

"It is the will of the Master, lady, that I lead you to the chambers that have been made ready for you, there to rest until the hour of the feast. Fear not; you shall meet your brethren then. You knights have leave, if it so pleases you, to exercise your horses in the gardens. They stand saddled in the courtyard, to which the woman will bring you," and she pointed to one of those two maiden who had danced the amour, "and with them she guides and an escort."

"She means that we must go," muttered Godwin, adding aloud, "farewell, sister, until to-night."

So they parted, unwillingly enough. In the courtyard they found the horses, Fiame and Smoke, as they had been told, also a mounted escort of four fierce-looking fedais and an officer. When they were in the saddle, this man, motioning to them to follow him, passed at a walking out of the courtyard into the gardens. Hence ran a broad road strewn with sand along which he began to gallop. This road followed the gulf which encircled the citadel and later turned Masyaf that way, as it were, an island on a mountain top with a circumference of over three miles.

As they went, the gulf always on their right hand, holding in their horse to prevent their passing that of their guide, swift as it was, they saw another troop approaching them. This was also preceded by an officer and the Assassins, as these servants of Al-je-bal were called by the Franks, and had behind him, mounted on a splendid coal-black steed and followed by guards, rode a mail-clad Frankish knight.

"It is Lozelle," said Wulf, "upon the horse that Sinan promised him."

At the sight of the man the fierce blood of Godwin. With a shout of warning he drew his sword. Lozelle saw, and out leapt his blade in answer. Sweeping past the officers who were with them and reinging up their steeds in a second they were face to face. Lozelle struck first and Godwin caught the stroke upon his buckler, but before he could return it the fedais of either party rushed between them and thrust them asunder.

"A pity," said Godwin, as they dragged his horse away. "Had they left us alone I think, brother, I might have saved you a moonlight duel."

"That I do not want to miss, but the chance is his head was good for nothing to end fro, set dish after dish filled with strange and savoury meats, from which the fedais picked choice morsels and served to Sinan and his guests fashioned, all of them, of silver or of gold.

Godwin and Wulf ate, though not with hunger's edge, but of what they ate they remembered nothing who were watching Sinan and straining their ears to catch a word of his speech seeming to take note or listen. Although she strove to hide it and to show indifferent, it was plain to them that Rosamund was much afraid. Again and again Sinan presented to her delicacies of food, some of these on the dishes and sometimes with his fingers, and these she was obliged to take, while Masouda bent over beside her with als fierce eyes so that she shrank away from him to the furthest limit of the broad seat.

Then wine, perfumed and spiced, was brought in golden cups, of which, having drunk, he offered to Rosamund. But she shook her head and asked Masouda for water, saying that she touched nothing stronger, and it was given her, cooled with snow. The brethren asked for nothing, and Sinan presently looked at them suspiciously and demanded the reason. Godwin replied that they were under a vow never to touch no wine till they returned to their own country, having sworn a warrior's oath. To this he answered meaningly that it was good and right to keep oaths, but in that country of which they spoke they were waterdrinkers for the rest of their lives, a saying at which they looked at each other, for now that he had drunk took hold of Sinan, and he began to talk who cast it from him as silent.

Then he met the Frank Lozelle to-day," he said to Godwin, through Masouda, "and he told me that you, brothers, had drawn your sword in his presence, your sister's husband. But they found no fault with you, and other than you were in the right. Now, Lozelle, who for a month has been my guest, who dwells under the shelter of the Master's hand and stretches out his shield over the head of any who seek it, who is my friend, has been struck in the face by you, and you have not avenged him. Is this the custom of your people?"

"Ay," replied Sinan, "I remember; they are strange. Still, I would that you had killed him, the unbelieving dog, who had dared to lift his eyes to the Rose of the World, your sister, as he went on, addressing Rosamund, and other eyes than yours I noted, who dared to look upon the face of

THE AEONS OF CHAOS.

By a Banker.

Looking backwards, and still backwards, down the long, unending vista of the dim, far off past, backward towards that remote period in time when the earth of ours, now so fair and so attractive, was without form and void, we see but a vast mass of seething, mallein rock and incandescent minerals, whirling an ever-changing, the parent luminary, and revolving round its sweeping axis like a fiery ball plunged in commercian darkness by an impenetrable ball of density, gaseous vapors; with no air, no water, and no life.

And then as the long aeons roll by, the surface of this fiery sphere grows cally cools and solidifies, ex truding the mountain ranges in the process, the vapors become attenuated, and, though still too dense to permit the direct rays of the sun to reach the earth, yet do our now present alternations of day and night becoming apparent. Oceans are formed, soon teeming with life, a firmament of atmosphere takes the place of the mephitic gases, and dry land appears. Dense forests of crytogamous plants and trees now spring forth, which in the humid, vapour laden atmosphere grow with wild and luxurious profusion; at a subsequent day, or seon, to be sealed up by superincumbent strata, there to mature into our priceless coal measures.

But before this sealing up process is completed, owing to the continued roaring the vapours had at length disappeared, and the sun, moon and stars—which had been created "in the beginning"—are made to appear, (sanh in the ancient Hebrew), and flora, (reeds), and the long reign of chaos finally comes to an end; life in astonishing abundance teems upon the earth; not however mammalian life, but gigantic animals far larger than any now existing, one terrific monster being no less than a hundred feet in length and thirty or more feet in height. Then these tremendous denouring creatures disappear—how and one can conjecture—and cattle, horses, bears, giraffes and other mammals take their place.

And at length, now that the earth has attained to its beauty and to its fitness for human habitation, man appears upon the scene and our first parents revel in its joys. But alas! they soon displease their Creator, are expelled from the ambrosial glades and enchantments of Eden, and are pestered with spiritual death. But if any of their descendants fail to attain to the glories of the hereafter they cannot lay the blame upon them. For the Son of God by made atonement for all sin, inherited or committed. And that atonement is a full and complete discharge and expiation for whosoever will but accept of it. If therefore any neglect to do so, the fault is theirs.

DEEP BREATHING.

Dr. G. Norman Meachen, in his lecture at the Institute of Hygiene, London, made some interesting remarks on this subject:

"Deep breathing, if persistently practired, in season and out of season, in the street and at the office, for a few minutes at a time, would soon bring the roses back to the faded cheeks and dissipate the sallow complexion. Long diseases, regarded as the dreaded scourge of consumption, would become less frequent. People would carry out this simple exercise, which is merely an imitation of nature's method with primitive man, who, in running and leaping, unconfined by clothing, develops excellent lung capacity, and uses it to the full."

LONG-LIVED PREMIERS.

Statesmanship seems conducive to longevity. Gladstone's case is the most remarkable of all in respect of the great age at which he held office in his last premiership. Indeed, the "People's Friend" recalls only two other premier who became an octogenarian while in office. This was Lord Palmerston. Of prime ministers besides these who lived to be octogenarians, we have Lord Sidmouth (Henry Addington), who died when eighty-seven; Earl Russell, eight-six; the Duke of Wellington, eighty-two; and Earl Grey, eighty-one. Rosenfield died at seventy-seven, and Chatham at seventy. At the other end of the scale we have Pitt, who died at forty-seven. But then, Pitt entered Cambridge University at fourteen, and was prime minister of Great Britain at twenty-four.—Weekly Sarcastic Gazette.

PAT LAUGHED LAST.

A short time ago two Englishmen on a visit to Ireland dropped in for the purpose of having a sail.

"Do you know, Pat," said he, "I would have a good joke at Pat's expense, and ask him if he knew anything about astrology?"

"Do, sahera, no," said Pat.

"Then, that is the best part of your life just lost," answered the Englishman.

A few minutes later a sudden squall arose and the boat capsized. Pat began to swim. The Britone, however, could not swim, and called loudly for Pat to help them.

"Do you know anything about swim-ology?" asked Pat.

"No," answered the Englishmen simultaneously.

"Well, by sahera," replied Pat, "this both of you three is lost."

Pat laughed last that time, didn't he?

THE RIGHT WEAVE OF CARPETS FOR HALLS AND STAIRS.

All carpets are not woven to stand the heavy wearing test of a stair carpet. A carpet that is entirely satisfactory for a hall may be a wearing failure for stairs. We have all stair carpets woven to our order in the proper weaves and we select designs that are recognised by the makers as most suitable for stairs. If we did not buy from makers we would not be sure of getting the right weaves. See the point? We show an extensive range, top notch of quality and style, suitable for modern homes.

ENGLISH WILTON. Two tones of Green, Bordered Stairs with Hall to match, 27 inches wide, $1.75 yard.

ENGLISH BRUSSELS. Crimson and Green blended in a very new conventional design, bordered stair with hall to match, $1.25 yard.

BRUSSELS. Two tones of Old Rose, Hall and Stairs alike, 27 inches wide, $1.25 yard.

TAPESTRY. Two toned Reds and combinations of Green and Red, hall and stairs to match, 60c yard.

TAPESTRY. We have a number of designs in stairs only, 45c, 50c, 60c yard. The makers from whom we buy do not call on other stores in this district. We are therefore safe in assuring that all designs are exclusive.

HOSIERY NOVELTIES

Not like it used to be in Hosiery business. Blacks have not the entire field to themselves. The fad now is to match the dress and shoes. Just now we are showing for women: White in plain and openwork, Champagnes, Pink, Sky, Grey in plain lisles, Tans in openwork and plains, Blacks embroidered in small, neat figures. For the girls White and Tan in a make that looks somewhat like openwork, but not sheer, Tans in fine elastic ribbed, Cashmeres in Tans and Reds.

All our fine Black Hose are dyed by Louis Hermsdorf, a dye that does not burn the feet, rub off or fade.

MAKING MONEY FROM BEES.

The business of bee-keeping, according to a writer in the New Idea Woman's Magazine for June, is "fascinating and pleasant." In fact, as the bees do the work, it is said that this occupation is the nearest that there is to having a number of good investments with certain dividends. "The initial outlay," says this writer "may be very small; fifteen dollars will secure a modern hive, a colony of good Italian bees, with a queen, and all of the necessary accessories. As soon as a little experience has been gained, the apiary may be built up by adding another to a few hundred working bees) together with new queens at intervals at the cost of a few dollars. The natural increase will then result in an apiary of fifty or one hundred colonies in a few years."

Many good suggestions are given to those desiring to add to their income by this charming industry. It appears that the time to begin the business of bee-keeping is during the warmer months, and "bees will be able to do except to watch the bees at their work and become as familiar as possible with their habits." One duty of the keeper, however, is to protect the bees as far as possible from their insect enemies. "Brush away the spider's web, craftily spun near the hive entrance, as well as to ward off the bold and who in consequence fly robbing the bee of her honey." Particularly for women, who desire to earn a modest income for themselves, in the country, is bee-keeping recommended as an "ideal out door occupation."

DEAD CREEK.

Lightning last Thursday struck a small hay barn belonging to John Orser, knocking off several boards and reduced a post to kindling wood. During the same storm lightning also struck a vacant house belonging to George D. Hamilton, and wrecked it badly. Neither building was insured. It also killed three head of young cattle a few miles south of here. The rain was so heavy as to carry away culverts and cause washouts in the wagon road to the depth of four and five feet. Rock Creek bridge, about one mile south of here, on the road leading to Arden, was completely carried away. The path was also washed out in the main division next day and they have been busy hauling plank for culverts and bridges, and also stone and other material to fill in the great trenches which were cut through the road bed in numerous places.

'TIS THE SPRING FEVER

THAT MAKES US ALL LIKE HARTS PANTING AFTER BROOKS.

OLD LONGING FOR THE WOODS

To Those Who Must Reprove the Desire Owing to Exigency of Their Situation In Life a Great Peace May Come to the Tired Soul by Contemplating the Text of Dr. Talmage's Sermon.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Dixey, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 10.—Like a breath from the cool woods in the midst of summer heat this sermon comes with a vivid picture of animal life, and their spiritual application. The text is Psalm xli, 1, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks."

What is the spring fever? What is that tired feeling which creeps over one as the months of May and June draw near? What is that exhausting sensation which makes the hand sluggish at its work and the brain dull as it tries to originate a thought and the legs heavy as lead when we get up in the mornings just preceding the summer? We vehemently deny the accusation that we are lazy. We never have been lazy in our lives. We daily go to our office and begin work even a little earlier than usual. We stay there longer than at any other time of the year. But in spite of ourselves the reading of our work are not only less in quantity, but far poorer in quality than at any other time of the year. We wonder what ails us, and we go to the doctor to get a tonic. The doctor tells us: "You are bilious. Your liver is torpid." Or he says, "You are overworked and must let up." But deep down in our hearts we know what is the matter. We have just the old longing for the woods. In the springtime it comes to us as naturally as the birds come to the flower gardens. It is not medicine we want, but the mountain air, with the fragrance of the evergreens and the soft grass and the leaves for a bed.

But with most of us the longings must be repressed. We may, however, give our thoughts a rest by dwelling on such a theme as I have chosen for this morning's treatment. I said to myself, "Probably there are many with the same longing as I will choose a text that will carry our thoughts away to the woods and the waters," and as I thought this beautiful text of the psalmist sprang to my mind, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

Ah, yes, I said to myself, we are all like Longfellow's forest lover. We are hunted and the thirsty deer seeking the water brooks. And, strange to say, as soon as I uttered the text in my study a wonderful peace came to my soul. I seemed to see the great, gentle eyed stag and that the way was leading me from the thickets. I seemed to hear the birds singing their love ditties. I seemed to see the cool trout leaping out of the brooks. I seemed to see the great cliffs rising above the valleys and the baldheaded mountains, like the grim and grizzly patriarchs, standing sentinel over all. Yes, I said to myself, for a little while at least I can go.

Goodbye, old city! We are about to leave you now. We are going to climb my way up the mountains for a little while, and as we lie down upon the bank of a creek or river by one of the beautiful deer licks we learn, in the first place, that the hart is dependent upon the water brook for his physical existence. He is not like the camel, that can store up his drinking water and carry it about with him for days; he is not like the lizard or the rattlesnake or the horned toad or the Gila monster, that live in the desert week in and week out, month in and month out, seemingly without water, or, if they do get water, they must absorb it from the bristling cactus, which grows everywhere around. But a deer is like a human being. Take water away from him, and he will die. Thus you can see how the deer for days and days from the water brooks. He has two reasons for his dependence on the stream. First, he is not a carnivorous animal. He does not live on flesh, but on herbs, and he must live where the water makes the grass grow and feeds it into life. In the next place, he must himself be able at least once or twice a day to daintily sip out of the woods, lift high his head to sniff for dangers and then gently move down and put his delicate lips into the cool waters of the babbling brooks. And so certain is the deer to go to the waters to refresh him in evening or the early morning that if a man is a lazy hunter and knows where the animals are accustomed to drink all he has to do is to go there and hide in the bushes, and instead of having to stalk the deer he will find the deer coming up within easy rifle range.

But these water courses suggest another thought. What bountiful provision God has made for the wants of all creatures. How the forest teems with herbage for the hungry deer and water for him when he is thirsty. Thus all God gives drink and food to the deer I find that he is daily providing for our hunger and slaking our thirst. Would that we might all feel that as God is feeding the birds of the air and is making the grass of the fields to grow and is caring for the timid deer of the forest and the prairies, so he is feeding and clothing us. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks for daily sustenance, so may my heart pant after thee, O God!"

But not alone for daily sustenance must the deer go to the water brooks. He must also run there for safety when the hounds and the hunters get after him. He knows as well as the human soul must run to the divine water brooks when temptations and persecutions get on his track. So more you study the figure of the hart being pursued by the dogs the more you can see your own life being beset by temptations and by persecutions. Unless you have more strength than I to you than your own, you, like the hart, must surely die.

Like the noble hind were you started forth in life. Tall, straight, broad of antlers were you. The rich, good blood of many noble generations was flowing in your veins. Your eye was quick and clear, your ear keen and alert. Your foot was as fleet as the wild gazelle's. It simply ona dog had come near you you could have grappled with him and overcome him, but Satan as a sportsman never hunts his game with but one mangy cur. When he starts forth for his prey he lets loose a whole pack of hounds. As you look back into your past life it is not the baying of one dog that you hear, but of myriads of dogs. Their calls seem to have come from all directions and when one of these hounds gave the signal that he had struck your trail, all the others knew it. A stay there longer than at any other time of the year. But in spite of ourselves the result of our work are not only less in quantity, but far poorer in quality than at any other time of the year. We wonder what ails us, and we go to the doctor to get a tonic. The doctor tells us: "You are bilious. Your liver is torpid." Or he says, "You are overworked and must let up." But deep down in our hearts we know what is the matter. We have just the old longing for the woods. In the springtime it comes to us as naturally as the birds come to the flower gardens. JOE THE BANKER (3215)

This fine young horse is growing much in favor since his colts have shown up so good. His colts figured prominently at the fall fairs, and one owned by Mr. A. Y. Price, of Wesley, took first prize, with its dam not a large mare), in the general purpose class at —Napanee, Centreville and Tamworth. Joe is a well muscled and a heavy-boned horse, a beautiful dapple brown with small star, has excellent feet and has proved a sure foal-getter.

There is, and always will be, a good demand for this class of horse, and if the breeder of to-day had a regular and adequate supply, a large sum of money would be left in the hands of the farmer.

We expect he will leave his groom's stable, Oak Flats, each Monday morning, coming to Moscow each night, where he will remain till Wednesday morning, then go to Joseph Yeomans' for noon, and W. A. Lasbere's, Strathcona, for night; Thursday to Violet, Thorpe, and Camden East for night, returning home Friday noon, and on Saturday to Oak Flats, where he will remain till Monday morning.

NO VAR (3459)

Commonly known by his every-day name, "Sandy," has wintered well and seems in good healthy condition, and has never been over-done, so should be fully as successful a getter this season as he has proven to be in the past one.

We have had a tempting offer to send this fine young horse to New York State for service by a gentleman who saw him here, but we have decided not to send him away, as the farmers here have given us a good patronage, so "Sandy" has a wide reputation as being one of the finest Clydesdales in Ontario. He colts well and fairly well, and are owned by Mr. A. Y. Price, of Wesley, took first prize, with its dam (not a large mare), in the general purpose class at —Napanee, Centreville and Tamworth.

Known to Thousands— Parmelee's Vegetable Pills regulate the action of the secretions, purify the blood and keep the stomach and bowels free from deleterious matter. Taken according to direction they will overcome dyspepsia, eradicate biliousness, and bring the digestive organs healthy and strong to perform their functions. Their merits are well known to thousands who know by experience how beneficial they are in giving tone to the system.

A Sound Stomach Means a Clear Head.—The high pressure of a person's life which business men of the present day are constrained to live makes drafts upon their vitality highly detrimental to their health. It is only by the most careful attention that they are able to keep themselves alert and active in the various messages, many of them know the value of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills for regulating the stomach and consequently keeping the head clear.

Wife—John, here's my new bathing suit. I don't see anything immodest in it, do you?

Hub.—Well, no—not so long as you keep out of sight.

No Alcohol In It—Alcohol or any other volatile matter which would impair strength by evaporation is not to be found in Abbey's Effervescent Salt. Nor do chemical tests affect it. It is as serviceable in the Arctic Circle as in the Torrid Zone, and equally useful in the higher latitudes, where man is more subject to colds from exposure to the elements.

She, unconstitutionally—Is my hat on straight?

Some visitors who were being shown over a popular lunatic asylum inquired of their guide what method was employed to discover when an inmate were sufficiently recovered to leave.

"Well!" replied he, "you see, it's this way. We have to go through the water, and we turns on the tap. We passes it running, and then we turns off the water with pails until they're emptied in two hours."

"How does that prove it?" asked one of the visitors.

"Well," said the guide, "them as gets idle lives off the fat of the land."

A little girl was out walking with her aunt one day. The aunt bowed to a man they met, remarking, "That is a friend of your Jennie's" asked the little girl.

"That is Mr. Melrose the village undertaker," said the aunt.

"Oh, yes," replied the child, quickly, "I remember him. He undertook my grandmother."

"What did you tell father about your prospects?" she asked.

"I told him I expected in the near future to be helped by a rich relative."

"Why, Charlie! You told me you had no rich relative!"

"I know I did, but I'll have one after the wedding, won't I?"

A man, accompanied by his wife, visited a merchant tailor to order a suit of clothes. The couple came to the conclusion that the manner of making, and the wife lost her temper. "Well," said the husband, "I suppose you are sorry you married me?" "I suppose you are the only man I ever could get clothes to fit." "Well," observed the husband meekly, "I didn't suppose you'd want to wear the coat and vest both."

Tottie—I don't see why you are going to marry Jack. You're not in love with him.

Dottie—No, but another girl is.

Gunner—You don't seem to have much luck, Jinks. I notice all you get is diclitis expert.

Gunner—Diclitis? Why, I wouldn't let him cut the appendix out of my dictionary.

"What sort of a man is Jinks?"

"The impression you get of Jinks depends on the circumstances under which you meet him. If you're there at the theatre, he's a man who tips the box office you're there to pay money he seems a lovely character."

"Ethel," he whispered, "will you marry me?"

"I don't know, Charles," she replied coyly.

"Well, when you find out," he said, rising, "send me word. I'll be at the bicycle shop."

"Why, Mabel Hicks! Still 10 cents! I don't see how you do it on 10, I'm going to ask her."

REDUCED A HARD SWELLING.

Mr. Gus B. Gerow, writing from Pembroke, tells how he injured his leg in a lumber camp. "A heavy log rolled against my leg and I was laid up with stiffness and a hard swelling. When I applied Polson's Nerviline I got relief. A few rubbings with this good liniment cured me." In the bush, Nerviline is indispensable. It cures rheumatism, neuralgia, toothache and internal disorders too. No person can afford to be without Nerviline. Useful for all internal and external pain. Large bottles 25c at all dealers.

MOONEY'S CAR LINE.

It takes a lot of confidence in one's success, and an abiding faith in Belleville's future, to invest the money necessary to equip a line of private freight cars in connection with one's business. Yet that is precisely what the Mooney Biscuit and Candy Company Limited of Stratford, Ont., has done. Manager Lance is an optimist of the standard size, weighing 35,000 pounds and having a waist measure of 50 pounds (go look). They are painted a rich cream color. On each side of the doors is the familiar shape and purple of the company's Hamilton Cream Soda. The Mooney Company is the only concern in Canada manufacturing biscuits and confectionery to have their business has so increased in three years that they have been compelled to double the size of their premises. The first private car of the Mooney Company to be heralded left the bakery at Stratford for Edmonton last week, over the Canadian Northern Railway, and will doubtless attract much attention wherever it goes on its arrival at its destination.

Remarkable Test.

Hyomei Has Been Known for Years and is Guaranteed to Cure Catarrh.

We have given Hyomei a most thorough and remarkable test.

The remedy has made so many cures that catarrh has ceased to be one of the most chronic cases of catarrh.

Breathed for a few minutes four times daily through an inhaler that comes with every outfit, it soothes the irritated mucous membrane of the nose, throat and lungs, kills the catarrhal germs, and a healthy and complete health. Its healing, antiseptic fragrance penetrates to the most remote air passages, as no medicine taken into the stomach can possibly do. Immediate relief almost always follows the use of Hyomei, and great benefit is seen after a few days' treatment.

The complete Hyomei outfit costs only $1, and consists of an inhaler that can be carried in the pocket or purse, and will last a lifetime, a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hyomei. If this is not sufficient for a complete cure, additional bottles of Hyomei can be obtained for 50 cents.

Compare this small expense with the fees charged by specialists.

You cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Write to-day for consultation. Think that will entitle you to the advice of our medical department without charge. The R. T. Booth Company, Hyomei Building, Ithaca, N.Y.

Symmetry of the Horse.

An exponent of the theory that the closer a draft horse is to the ground the better both for service and endurance. This is generally true probably, but it is possible for a horse to be too close to the ground, comments National Stockman and Farmer. It is rare, and many are too far from it. The question of breeding draft horses with legs that will work with the breeder needs to consider. His ideal should be a symmetrical horse, and in the middle ground. Such horses will have height enough and not too much. A symmetrical horse is a well balanced horse, going in his build so he

POTATOES GROW FROM THE STOCK.

Peterboro Examiner :

"A freak of nature" is what Mr. W. Miles, 209 Hunter Street, terms the growth of the potato tubers from the potato stock which he recently experimented on. Mr. Miles called at The Examiner to-day with a few samples of the freak, and explained how he had for the first time in his long gardening career used potatoes grown from the stock. He planted the seed which came from the Experimental Farm last year, on Good Friday last, and when the stocks were four or five inches in height he cut them off at the joints and replanted them. In every joint a potato, and at some, two or three, began to grow. Mr. Miles transplanted over 200 stocks and intends producing potatoes from them. He also showed to the Examiner some new potatoes of the same kind as large as hens' eggs, the size they generally are about the 12th of July.

Mr. Miles has been a gardener all his life until a short time ago, and at present he works in the Canadian General. He came from Newburgh, Addington County.

Our senior baseball team played the return game of baseball with the Camden East team in Camden East on Thursday last, and were defeated, the score being 15-10. George Sherry pitched for the locals and Roy Smith for the home team. As the score would indicate both teams hit the ball hard, but with any kind of support the little southpaw would have pulled out a game. Next week the locals play him at times was of the rankest kind, and the fielding was a great game, striking out fourteen 12 and 20 men. Scott, the Thorney of Camden East, made up for all three times in succession. George Walker, of the locals, was also in the box, pitching the leather away to the outfield for seven innings.

Historical.

The County of Lennox and Addington has a most interesting history as any in the Province of Ontario. Where are the records of that history at the present time? Some have been collected by the Ontario Historical Society and are in Toronto; some are in the hands of local collectors, and are safe as long as the present owners live and care for them; but the greater portion of them are still with the various families whose ancestors have made this history so interesting. All of these should be very carefully collected in some safe depository, and put in the hands of a reliable organization, in order that the data contained may have access to them, and may feel with pride that the records of the history of their country are as complete as any in the Dominion.

With this object in view, it is thought advisable to form a Lennox and Addington Historical Society, with Archives at Napanee.

A meeting will be called to perfect the organization at an early date, and in the meantime, I would be pleased to receive all data of this County—both those living here at present, and those who did have to go for the old home; although, far away,—with suggestions for the formation of such a society, and ideas for its development of it.

Any one knowing you are not interested every one is in some way interested, and a knowledge of the history of how the mother, father or grandfather assisted in the rebellion of '37 or the war of 1812; or carry the name of "Loyalist," as E. R. C. Swayne, Oxford Mills.

Don't Use Drug Cures for Headache

They Hurt You. Use Zutoo.

Don't think because the drug cures for headache do not make your heart palpitate, dull your nerves or upset your stomach just when you take them, that they are not hurting you, for they are.

The magazine "Health" speaks truly when it says: "Every dose of such drugs is at the expense of vitality, and sooner or later the penalty for outraging nature will be exacted."

You can avoid this penalty and cure your headaches just as quickly by taking the vegetable cure, Zutoo.

It is Harmless as Soda.

Chemists and Physicians say there Can't be a Better Medecine for women

than Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets

Women who Have Taken Them Say So, Too.

Before we began making Health Tablets we submitted the formula to many physicians and chemists for their opinion. We wanted to improve it, if it could be improved, as we were bound to have not only the latest but the best possible medicine for women.

But we found out it couldn't be improved.

A firm of chemists, known all over America, wrote to us:

"We cannot suggest a single change or addition that would improve the formula or make it more beneficial to women."

And the doctors to whom the formula was submitted said the same thing.

And better still, the remarkable results obtained from their use by women suffering from a run-down condition or some female weakness, prove that the doctors and chemists were right.

For after all, results speak louder than words.

We want you to take just one box of these tablets, and you will share the opinion of these doctors and chemists that

By Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," Etc.

Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

"Brother, be not so awkward; pick up that dish and answer the lord Sinan as is your right—I mean, touching the matter of Lozelle."

Wulf stooped to obey, and his mind cleared which had been so near to madness.

"I wish it not, lord," he said, "who, if I can, have very good hope to slay this fellow on the third night from now. It I fall, then let my brother take my place, but not before."

"Yes, I forgot," said Sinan. "So I decreed, and that will be a fight I wish to see. If he kills you then your brother will meet him. And if he kills you both—then perhaps I, Sinan, will meet him—in my own fashion. Sweet lady, knowing where the course is laid, say, do you fear to see this fray?"

Rosamund's face paled, but she answered proudly:

"Why should I fear what my brethren do not fear? They are brave knights, bred to arms, and God, in Whose hand are all our destinies—even yours, O Lord of Death—He will guard the right."

When this speech was translated to him Sinan quailed a little. Then he answered:

"Lady, know that I am the Voice and Prophet of Allah—ay, and his sword to punish evil-doers and those who do not believe. Well, it what I hear is true, your brethren are skilled horsemen who even dared to pass my servant on the narrow bridge, so victory may rest with them. Tell me which or them do you love the least, for he shall first face the sword of Lozelle."

Now as Rosamund prepared to answer, Philosa scanned her face through her half-closed eyes. But, whatever she may have felt within, it remained calm and cold as though it were cut in stone.

"To me they are as one man," she said. "When one speaks, both speak. I love them equally."

Then, for the first time, it shall go as I have said. Brother Blue-eyes shall fight first, and if he falls then Brother Grey-eyes. The feast is set, and it is my hour for prayer. Slaves, bid the people fill their cups. Lady, I pray of you, stand forward on the dais."

She obeyed, and at a sign the black slave-women gathered behind her with their flaming torches. Then Sinan rose also, and tried with a long voice;

"Servants of Al-je-bal, pledge, command you, this Flower of flowers, the high born Princess of all Basheq, the niece of the Sultan, Salah-ed-din, whom men call the Great," and he sneered, though he be not so great as I, this Queen of maids who soon—" Then, checking himself, he drank off his wine, and with a low bow presented the empty, jeweled cup to Rosamund.

All the company drank also, and shouted till the hall rang, for her loveliness as she stood thus in the fierce light of the torches, aflame as these men were with the vision-breeding wine of Al-je-bal, moved them to madness.

"Queen! our Queen!" they shouted. "Queen of our Master and of us all!"

Sinan heard and smiled. Then, motioning for silence, he took the hand of Rosamund, kissed it, and turning passed from the hall preceded by his singing women and surrounded by the dais and guards.

Godwin and Wulf stepped forward to speak with Rosamund, but Masouda insinuated herself between them, saying in a cold, clear voice:

"It is not permitted. Go, knights, and cool your flushed brows in the garden, where sweet water runs. Your sister is my charge. Fear not, for she is guarded."

"Come," said Godwin to Wulf; "we had best obey."

So together they walked through the crowd of those feasters that remained, for most of them had already left the hall, who made way, not without reverence, for the brethren of this new star of beauty, on to the terrace, and from the terrace into the gardens. Here they stood awhile in the sweet freshness of the night, which was very grateful after the heated, perfume-laden air of the banquet; then began to wander up and down among the scented trees and flowers. The moon, floating in a cloudless sky, was almost at its full, and by her light they saw a wondrous scene. Under many of the trees and in tents set about here and there, rugs had been spread, and to them came men who had drunk of the wine of the feast, and cast themselves down to sleep.

"Are they drunk?" asked Wulf.

"It would seem so," answered Godwin.

Cook's Cotton Root Compound.

The great Uterine Tonic, and only safe Monthly Medicine. Prepared according to directions which women can rely on. Pamphlet free. Address: The Cook Medicine Co., Windsor, Ont. Formerly of Detroit, Mich.

Yet these men appeared to be mad rather than drunk, for they walked steadily enough, but with wide-set, dreamy eyes; nor did they seem to sleep upon the rugs, but lay there, uttering at the sky and muttering with their lips, their faces steeped in a strange, unholy rapture. Sometimes they would rise and walk a few paces with outstretched arms, till the arms closed in some fancied embrace, then sink down invisible, to which they bent their heads to babble awhile. Then they walked back to their rugs again, where they remained silent.

As they lay thus, white-veiled women appeared, who crouched by the heads of these sleepers, murmuring into their ears, and when from time to time they sat up, gave them to drink from cups they carried, after partaking of some liquid they kept again and became quite senseless.

Only the women would move on to others and serve them likewise. Some of them approached the brethren with a slow, gliding motion, and offered them the cup; but they walked forward, taking no notice, whereupon the girls left them, laughing softly, and saying such things as "To-morrow we shall meet," or "Soon you will be glad to drink and enter Paradise."

"When the time comes doubtless we shall be glad, who have, dwelt here," answered Godwin gravely, but as he spoke in French they did not understand him.

"Step out, brother," said Wulf, "for at the very sight of those rugs I grow sleepy, and the wine in the cups sparkles as bright as their bearers' eyes."

So they walked on towards the sound of a waterfall, and, when they came to it, drank, and bathed their faces and heads.

"This is better than their wine," said Wulf. Then, catching sight of women forms flitting round them, looking like ghosts amid the moonlit glades, they pressed forward till they reached an open sward where there were no rugs, no sleepers, and no cup-bearers. "Now," said Wulf, halting, "tell me what does all this mean."

"Are you deaf and blind?" asked Godwin, "cannot you see that yonder fiend is in love with Rosamund, and means to take her, as he well may do?"

Wulf groaned aloud, then answered:

"I swear that first I will send his soul to hell, even though our own must keep it company."

"Ay," answered Godwin, "I swear it in like fashion. Brother, I do not remember, that is the end for all of us. Let us wait then to strike until we know—where the course is laid, say, do you fear to see this fray?"

Rosamund's face paled, but she answered proudly:

"Why should I fear what my brethren do not fear? They are brave knights, bred to arms, and God, in Whose hand are all our destinies—even yours, O Lord of Death—He will guard the right."

When this speech was translated to him Sinan quailed a little. Then he answered:

"Lady, know that I am the Voice and Prophet of Allah—ay, and his sword to punish evil-doers and those who do not believe. Well, it what I hear is true, your brethren are skilled horsemen who even dared to pass my servant on the narrow bridge, so victory may rest with them. Tell me which or them do you love the least, for he shall first face the sword of Lozelle."

Now as Rosamund prepared to answer, Philosa scanned her face through her half-closed eyes. But, whatever she may have felt within, it remained calm and cold as though it were cut in stone.

"To me they are as one man," she said. "When one speaks, both speak. I love them equally."

Silently as a wraith, Masouda, now appearing in the open spaces, now vanishing beneath the dense clusters of cedar boughs, till she reached a naked, lonely rock which stood almost upon the edge of the gulf. Opposite to this rock was a great mound such as ancient peoples reared over the bodies of their dead, and in the mound cunningly hidden by growing shrubs, a massive door. Masouda took a key from her girdle, and, having looked around to see that they were alone, unlocked it.

"Enter," she said, pushing them before her.

They obeyed, and through the darkness saw a chamber hewn out of the rock.

"Now we are safe awhile," she said with a sigh, "or, at least, so I think, for I will lead you no further there is more light."

Then, taking each of them by the hand, she went forward along a smooth incline, till presently they saw the moonlight in the depths of the gulf below to this opening was a ridge or shoulder of rock, very steep and narrow.

"See the only road that leads from the citadel of Masyaf save that across the bridge," said Masouda.

"A bad one," answered Wulf, staring downward.

"Ay, yet horses trained to rocks can follow it. As its foot is the bottom of the gulf, and a mile or more away to the left a deep cleft which leads to the top of the mountain and to freedom. Will you take it now? By to-morrow's dawn you might be far away."

"And where would the lady Rosamund be?" asked Wulf.

"In the harem of the lord Sinan—that it, very soon," she answered, coolly.

"Oh, say it not!" he exclaimed, clasping her arm, while Godwin leaned back against the wall of the cave.

"Why should I hide the truth? Have you no eyes my way, that is enamoured of her lovelimess—like others? Listen; a while ago my master Sinan chanced to lose his queen—now, we need not ask, but it is said that she wearied him. Now, as he must by law, be mourn for four months, from full moon to full moon. But on the day after the full moon—that is, the third morning from now—he may wed again, and I think there will be a marriage. Till then, however, your sister is as safe as though she yet sat in home in England before Salah-ed-din dreamed his dream."

"Therefore," said Godwin, "within that time she must either escape or die."

"There is a third way," answered Masouda, shrugging her shoulders. "She might stay and become the wife of Sinan."

Wulf muttered something between his teeth, then stepped towards her threateningly, saying:

"Accursed be, O—"

"Stand back, pilgrim John," she said, with a laugh. "If I receive her, which indeed would be hard, it will not be for fear of your great arm—but—"

"What, then, will avail, Masouda?" asked Godwin in a cold voice, for he saw that Wulf was beyond reason.

UNKNOWN FRIENDS.

There are many people who have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with splendid results, but we are unknown because they have hesitated about giving a testimonial of their experience for publication. These people, however, are none the less friends of the remedy. They have done much towards making it a household word by their personal recommendations to friends and neighbors. It is a good medicine to have in the home and is widely known for its cures of diarrhoea and all forms of bowel trouble. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 22-1

"even if we could.

"I am glad that you spared me that insult," she replied with flashing eyes, "for I am not her lover—yet. Yet," she added more humbly, "seeing my home and business, and what I appear to be, I and will soon be clothed in her dress and the empty cup in her hand, " it had not been strange. Now hear me, brethren, no word of pretence will you are in favor with Sinan, who believes you to be the brothers of the lady Rosamund, not her lovers; but from the moment he learns the truth your doom is sealed. Now what the lord Sinan has said is true, that the Al-je-bal may know at any time—and will know, if these should speed.

"Meanwhile, you are free; so tomorrow, while you ride about the garden, as you will do, take note of the tall rock that stands without, and how to reach it from any point, even in the dark. To-morrow, also, when the moon is up, they will lead you to the narrow bridge, to ride your horses to and fro there, that they may learn not to fear it in that light. When you have stabled them go into the gardens and spend the afternoon there at the place being so far away you can do. The guards will let you pass, thinking only that you desire to drink a cup of wine with some fair friend, as is the custom of our guests. Enter this cave—here is the key," and she handed it to Wulf, "and if I be not there, await me. Then I will tell you my plan, if I have any, and until then I must scheme and think. Now it grows late—go."

"And you, Masouda," said Godwin, doubtfully; "how will you escape this place?"

"By a road you do not know of, for I am mistress of the secrets of this city. Still, I thank you for your thought of me, Go, I say, and lock the door behind you."

So they went in silence, doing as she bade them, and walked back through the gardens, that now seemed empty enough, to the stable-entrance of the guest-house, where the guards admitted them without question.

That night the brethren slept together in one bed, fearing that if they lay apart some hither might never be found in their sleep and not awake. Indeed it seemed to them that, as before, they heard footsteps and voices in the darkness.

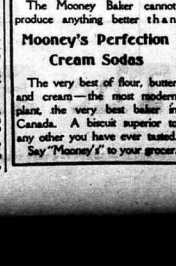
Next morning, when they had breakfasted, they loitered awhile, hoping to win speech with Rosamund, or sight of her, or at the least that Masouda would come to them, but they saw no Rosamund, and no Masouda came. At length an officer appeared, and beckoned to them to follow him. So they followed, and were led through the halls and passages to the terrace of justice, where Sinan, clad in his black robe, sat as before beneath a canopy in the midst of the sun-lit marble floor. There, too, beside him, also beneath the canopy and gorgeously apparelled, sat Rosamund. They strove to advance and speak with her, but guards came between them, pointing out a place where they must stand a few yards away. Only Wulf said in a loud voice, in English:

"Tell us, lady, is it well with you?" Lifting her pale face, she smiled and nodded.

Then, at the bidding of Sinan, Masouda commanded them to be silent, saying that it was not for them to speak to the Lord of the Mountain, or his Companion, unless they were first bidden so to do, but would hear what they wished to know, they were silent.

Now some of the dais drew near the canopy, and consulted with their master on what seemed to be a private matter, for their faces were troubled. Presently he gave an order, whereon they resumed their seats and a messenger left the terrace. When they appeared again, in their company were three noble-looking Saracens, who were accompanied by a retinue of servants and wore green turbans, showing that they were descendants of the Prophet. These men, who seemed weary with long travel, marched up the terrace with a proud mien, not looking at the dais or any one until they saw the brethren standing side by side, at whom they paused a little. Next they caught sight of Rosamund sitting in the shadow of the canopy and bowed to her, but of the Al-je-bal they took no notice.

"Who are you, and what is your pleasure?" asked Sinan, after he had eyed them awhile. "I am the ruler of this country. These are my ministers." And he pointed to the dais, "and here is my sceptre," and he touched the blood-red dagger broidered on his robe of black.



A Baker's Triumph

The Mooney Baker cannot produce anything better than

Mooney's Perfection Cream Sodas

The very best of flour, butter and cream—the most modern plant, the very best baker in Canada. A biscuit superior to any other you have ever tasted.

Say "Mooney's" to your grocer.

Now that Sinan had declared himself the emissary of Allah, he was obeyed enough. Then their spokesman answered him.

"That matter we know; it has been seen afar. Twice already we have cut down its bearers even in the tent of our master. Lord of Hosts, we acknowledge the emblem of murder, and we bow to you whose title is 'the beast' and 'murderer.' As for our mission, it is this. We are the ambassadors of Salah-ed-din, Commander of the Faithful, Sultan of the East; in these papers signed with his signet are our credentials, if you would see them."

"So," answered Sinan, "I have heard of that chief. What is his will with you?"

"This, Al-je-bal. A Frank in your pay, and a traitor, has stolen away, from a certain lady, niece of Salah-ed-din, the princess of Baalbec, whose father was a Frankish baron named D'Arcy, and who herself is named Rose of the World. The Sultan, Salah-ed-din, having been informed of the matter by his servant, the prince Hassan, who escaped from your soldiers, (Thud that the said lady, his niece, be delivered to him forthwith, and with her the head of the Frank Lozelle he may have if he will after to-morrow night. The lady I keep," smiled Sinan. "What then?"

"Then, Al-je-bal, in the name of Salah-ed-din, we declare war on you—war till this high place of yours is pulled stone from stone; war till your tribe be dead, till the last man, woman, and child be slain, until your carcass is tossed to the crows to feast on."

Now Sinan rose in fury and rent at his beard.

"Go back," he said, "and tell that dog you name a sultan, that low as he is, the humble-born son of Ayoub, I, Al-je-bal, do him no honor that he does not observe. My queen is dead, and two days from now, when my month of mourning is expired, I shall take to wife his niece, the princess of Baalbec, who sits here beside me, my bride-elect."

At these words Rosamund, who had been listening intently, started like one who has been stung to the quick, put her hands before her face and groaned.

"Princess," said the ambassador, who was watching her, "you seem to understand our language; is this your will, to mate your noble blood with that of the heretic chief of the Assassins?"

"Nay, nay!" she cried. "It is no will of mine, who am a helpless prisoner and by faith a Christian. If my uncle Salah-ed-din is indeed as great as have heard, then let him show his power and deliver me, and with me these my brethren, the knights Sir Godwin and Sir Wulf."

"So you speak Arabic," said Sinan. "Good; our loving converse will be easier, and for the rest—well, the whims of women change. Now, you messengers of Salah-ed-din, begone, lest I send you on a longer journey, and tell your master that I, Sinan, dare to lift his standards against my walls my fedais shall speak with him. By day and by night, not for one moment shall he be safe. Poison shall lurk in his cup and a dagger in his bed. Within a hundred of his men, and another hundred shall appear. His most trusted guards shall be his executioners. The women in his harem shall bring him to his doom—ay, death shall be in the very air he breathes. If he would escape it, therefore, let him hide himself within the walls of his city of Damascus, or arm himself with wars against the mad Cross-worshipper, and leave me to live in peace with this lady whom I have chosen."

"Great words, worthy of the Great Assassin," said the ambassador.

"Great words in truth, which shall be followed by great deeds. What chance have you of your message to a nation sworn to obey to the death? You smile? Then come hither you—and you," to the two who had remained at his dais by name.

They rose and bowed before him.

"Now, say, worthy servants, he said, "show these heretic dogs how you obey, that their master may learn the power of your master. I am old and weary of life. Begone, and await me in Paradise."

The two men bowed again, trembling a little. Then, straightening themselves, without a word they ran side by side and leapt into the abyss.

"Has Salah-ed-din servants such as these?" asked Sinan in the silence that followed. "Well, what they have done, all would do, if I bid them slay Back, now; and, if you will, take these Franks with you, who are my guests, that they may bear witness of what you have seen, and of the state in which you left their sister. Translate to the knights, woman."

So Masouda translated. Then Godwin answered through her.

"We understand little of this matter, who are ignorant of your tongue, but O Al-je-bal, ere we leave your sheltering roof we have a quarrel to settle with the man Lozelle. Grant that, with your permission, we will go, but not before."

Now Rosamund sighed as if in relief, and Sinan answered:

"As you will, so be it," adding, "Give these envoys food and drink before they go."

But their spokesman answered:

"We partake not of the bread and salt of murderers, lest we should become of their fellowship. All we are depart, but within a week we appear again in the company of ten thousand spears, and on some of them shall your head be set. Your safe-conduct guards us till the sunset. After that, do your worst, as by your deeds you deserve, our counsel to you is that you slay yourself and so gain immortal honor."

Now Sinan waved his hand and the court broke up, Rosamund leaving it first, and accompanied by Masouda, escorted by guards, after which the brethren were commanded to depart also.

So they went, talking earnestly of all these things, but save in God finding no hope at all.

CHAPTER XIV.

Saladin will come," said Wulf the hopeful, and from the high place where they stood he pointed to the plain beneath, across which a band of horsemen moved at full gallop. "Look, yonder goes his embassy."

"Ay," answered Godwin, "he will come, but I fear me, too late."

"Yes, brother, unless we go to meet him. Masouda has promised."

"Masouda," sighed Godwin. "Ah! to think that so much should hang upon the faithfulness of one woman."

"Then cease and hang her," said Wulf. "It hangs on Fate, who writes with her finger. Come, let us ride."

So, bellowed by their guards, they rode in the gardens, taking note, without seeming to do so, of the position of the tall rock, and of how it could be approached from every side. Then they went again and waited for some sign or word of Rosamund, but in vain. That night there was no feast, and their food was brought to them in the guest-house. While they sat at it Masouda appeared for a moment to tell them that they had leave to ride the bridge in the moonlight, and that their escort would await them at a certain hour.

The brethren asked if their sister Rosamund were coming to dine with them. Masouda answered that as the queen-elect of the Al-je-bal it was not lawful that she should eat with any other men, even her brothers. Then as she passed out, stumbling as though by accident, she brushed against Godwin, and muttered:

"Remember, to-night," and was gone.

When the moon had been up an hour the officer of their escort appeared, and led them to their horses, which were waiting, and they rode away to the castle bridge. As they approached it they saw Lozelle departing on his great black stallion, which was in a lather of foam. It seemed that he also had made trial of that perilous path, for the people, of whom there were many gathered there, clapped their hands and shouted, "Well ridden, Frank! well ridden!"

Now, Godwin leading on Flame, they faced the bridge and walked their horses over it. Nor did these hang back, although they snorted a little at the black gulf on either side. Next they returned at a trot, then over again, and yet again at a canter and a gallop, sometimes together and sometimes singly. Lastly, Wulf made Godwin halt in the middle of the bridge and galloped down upon him at speed, till he reined his horse back on its hoofs beating the air, and galloped back again, followed by Godwin.

"Well done, brother," Wulf said as they rode to the castle, "and nobler or more gentle horses were never crossed by men. I have good hopes for the morrow night."

"Ay, brother, but I had no sword in my hand. I am not sure confident, for Lozelle is desperate and a skilled fighter, as I know who have stood face to face with him. Moreover, his black stallion is well trained, and has more weight than ours. Also, yonder is a fearsome place on which to ride a course, and one of which none but the Assassins themselves would have thought."

"I shall do my best," answered Wulf, "and if I fall, why, then, act upon your own counsel. At least, let him not kill both of us."

Having stabled their horses the brethren wandered into the garden, and, avoiding the cup-bearing women and the men they piled with their drugged drink, took a roundabout road to the tall rock. Then, finding themselves alone, they climbed it, and, at a hole dug through it, locked it again on the further side and groped their way to the inner chamber of the cave. Here they stood awhile studying the descent of the gulf as the moon sank behind it, till suddenly Godwin, feeling a hand upon his shoulder, started round to find Masouda at his back. She leaned solemnly Godwin, feeling a hand upon his shoulder, started round to find Masouda at his back. She leaned solemnly Godwin, waste no words, for my time is short, but if you think that you can escape by this path you are fools. Judge—give me the Signet which hangs about your neck, and I will go back to you here and do your best to save the lady Rosamund and yourselves."

"Nay," said Wulf, and he drew from his mail shirt and his breast, Godwin drew out the ancient ring, carved with the strange names and signs, and with the emblem of the dagger, and handed it to Masouda.

"Trust indeed," she said with a little laugh, as, after scanning it closely by the light of the moon and the cave's mouth, she handed with it, she hid it in her bosom.

"Yes, lady," he answered, "I trust you, though why you should risk so much for us I do not know."

"Why? Well, perhaps for hate's sake, for Sinan is not rule by love; perhaps because, being of a wild blood, I am willing to risk all for a man who does not if I win or die; perhaps because you saved me from the lion—but, what is it to you, Sir Godwin, why a certain woman-spy of the Assassins, whom in your own land you would spit on, chooses to do this or that?"

She ceased and stood before him with heaving bosom and flashing eyes, a mysterious white figure in the moonlight, most beautiful to see.

Godwin bit his beard, stir and the blood flow to his brow, but before he could speak Wulf broke in, saying:

"Sir Godwin, we are words, lady Masouda, so tell us what we must do."

"This," she answered, "something can again. "To-morrow night about this hour you fight Lozelle upon the narrow bridge. Right Princess, our counsel to you is that you slay yourself and so gain immortal honor."

Now Sinan waved his hand and the court broke up, Rosamund leaving it first, and accompanied by Masouda, escorted by guards, after which the brethren were commanded to depart also.

So they went, talking earnestly of all these things, but save in God finding no hope at all.

IN ANGLO-SAXON NAMES

NOVELIST'S GREAT CHARACTER AND SCENES FROM BIBLE.

STORY WRITER'S CONFESSION

High Spiritual Encouragement in the Dramatic Story of the Queen of Sheba In the Court of Wise King Solomon—"The One-Half of the Greatness of Thy Wisdom Was Not Told Me."

Los Angeles, Cal., June 17.—In the dramatic story of the Queen of Sheba's experience in the court of the wise King the preacher finds a lesson of high spiritual encouragement. The text is II. Chronicles ix. 6, "The one-half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me."

It is amazing to find how much the incidents and the thrilling scenes of the Bible are reproduced under other names in the literary masterpieces of the present day. Like the hugs trees of the Mariposa grove, which anchored their roots in the soil centuries ago and have lately had tacked upon their bark the names of "Grant," "Lee," "Washington," "Dewey" or "Roosevelt," these old Bible scenes have been rechristened with modern names. But they still remain the same old scenes as the Mariposa trees remain the same old trees, no matter what signboards have been nailed upon their sides. Furthermore, many of our greatest writers attribute the strength of their books to the fact that they have gone to the sacred writers to find their inspirations. "Most of my great characters and scenes have been drawn from Biblical lore," lately wrote an English novelist. "Some people may not recognize their antiquity because they are not Bible students. But these supposed creations of my brain lived thousands upon thousands of years ago, although I have dressed them up in modern clothes and given them Anglo-Saxon names." These are not the identical words of the noted English writer. I cannot remember his expression, but only the conveyed his confession just the same.

Now we can find the scene of King Solomon as a young prince, choosing wisdom, reproduced in many different literary masterpieces. Thus Lamartine, the great French poet, who died in 1869, gave a beautiful description of it in his story of King Nimrod. The King had three sons. He offered to them three cases, the one of gold, the second of amber, and the third of clay. The gold represented "empire," the amber "glory or fame," the third represented "wisdom from God." "Choose!" cried King Nimrod. "Choose!" And when the youngest son chose the case of clay King Nimrod said: "Thou hast chosen well. Thou hast chosen best of all, for thou canst command wisely and shall wave the sceptre as well as mount the throne of fame."

We find the wonderful Bible character of young Solomon being reproduced in Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice." When the young Hebrew prince stands before God and says, "Give me now wisdom and knowledge that I may go out and come in before this people, for who can judge this people that is so great?" we seem to see Portia standing with her three caskets, the one of gold, the other of silver and the third of lead. Then we see the avaricious man reaching for the casket of gold. Then we see the selfish man reaching for the casket of silver. But lastly we see the true lover lifting up the casket of lead. And when Bassanio chose the leaden casket he won all that his heart could wish, for he won fame and honor besides wisdom and love. Thus, as Shakespeare and Lamartine have their heroes lift the vase of clay or the casket of lead, they say: "Well done! Well done, thou sagacious man! All success shall be thine." We seem to hear God speak to the young Prince Solomon these words when he chooses wisdom instead of gold, "Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee, and I will give thee riches and wealth and honor such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there be any after thee like unto thee." Here the fame and riches of Solomon not only spread through his own country, but also to the farthest parts of the sea.

The scene changes. We are to-day standing in the Davidic capital. There is great excitement everywhere. The royal courtiers are riding every whither. The King's guards are marching to the city's gates. The whole capital is in gala day attire. "What is the matter?" you ask. "Why? says a courtier, halting his chariot, "do you not know that the beautiful Queen of Sheba from the great height of the south is coming to visit our King? She has heard so much of the fame of Solomon's wealth and wisdom that she has come to test them for herself. Yea, more than that, she comes with her courtiers now. Make way there. Stand back. There is the King's alighting I meet her. For they not a glorious pair of rulers?" Was not this the welcome that was given to the Queen of Sheba when she came to prove Solomon with hard questions?

You know the rest of the story. After the Queen of Sheba had seen all and heard all and communed with Solomon on all that was in her heart, she turned to him and said, "It was a true report which I heard in mine own land of thine acts and of thy wisdom." Yea, the reports of Solomon's wisdom were great, but they were not exaggerated. Indeed, they were understated. For after the Queen of Sheba had gone on enumerating what she had heard, she cries out in the words of my text, "The one-half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me." Now as the wisdom of King Solomon has always been used by the pulpit commentators as a symbol of God's wisdom, I thought to-day I would try to tell you in a humble way a little about the divine wisdom.

Truly, like King Solomon's, God's wisdom is a wisdom which passeth all understanding.

King Solomon stands as the symbol of the "All Knowing One." He was the wisest of all men. The Bible distinctly declares it. Not only were all the secrets of the past open to him as open book, but he was the reader of men's minds and the prober of the innermost secrets of their hearts before they had opened their lips to speak to him a word. You all know how the wisdom of King Solomon was first tasted by the Queen of Sheba before she came to the Jerusalem capital to visit the wisest of all men. Legend tells us that she first sent a letter to Solomon by her ambassadors. Accompanying these ambassadors she sent 600 youths dressed as maidens and 600 maidens dressed as youths. These she sent a chalice and a diamond intricately pierced. Then, writes Dr. Hirsch, the letter was supposed to read thus: "As a true prophet thou will be able to separate the maidens from the youths. Pierce the diamond and fill the goblet with water that hath not dropped from the clouds nor ascended forth from the land beneath." Legend tells us further that King Solomon told the ambassadors the contents of the letter before they had opened. Then he solved the three riddles in the following way: First he placed a basin of water between each youth and maiden, and by the way they washed he was able to distinguish the boys from the girls. Second, he threaded the intricately pierced diamond by compelling a worm to crawl through the crystal labyrinth, while there was tied to the body of the worm a very small silken thread. Then he filled the gold goblet with water which had not fallen from the heavens above or arisen from the earth beneath by driving a colt around and flanks were covered with foam and flanks were covered with sweat. Then he filled the goblet to the brim. These examples of the wisdom of Solomon may be only "fairy tales," they may be only fables or not, one fact we do know, and that is that the wisdom of King Solomon stands as a type of the all knowing wisdom, the wisdom of an omniscient, all seeing God.

Is it not a blessed satisfaction to you that God knows everything? The world for years may have misjudged, condemned and misunderstood us, not because it is an unjust world at heart, but simply because its knowledge of us is limited. How differently we would treat our own differently we would treat our own children if we could see the secret of the conditions of their lives. I think the saddest remark I ever heard of any one making was by a dear friend of my church. She was lying in bed about to die of a cancer. One day she looked up and said: "I wonder if God will ever forgive me for being irritable and faultfinding to my children? I sometimes think I was not to blame for being cross. I sometimes think that this cancer has been working upon me and contributing my system for years and years, and I did not know it, and my irritability was due to physical weakness not because my nature was naturally cross." Ah, yes, the world may not know the causes of our doings, but God knows. Is it not a blessed thought to you that God knows your every thought and your every deed and does not misinterpret your actions, as the world so often does. He knows all. Yes! all.

King Solomon, in the next place, was not a man of blood. He was not the central figure of sanguinary battlefields. His chief musical instinct was not the bugle to sound forth the clarion honor such as many of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there be any after thee like unto thee." Here the fame and riches of Solomon not only spread through his own country, but also to the farthest parts of the sea.

The scene changes. We are to-day standing in the Davidic capital. There is great excitement everywhere. The royal courtiers are riding every whither. The King's guards are marching to the city's gates. The whole capital is in gala day attire. "What is the matter?" you ask. erful King, a friend to the great and the powerful of his realm, but he is also the symbol of a just King, looking after the rights of the helpless and the weak. Solomon was not only willing to take by the hand the great King Hiram of Tyre and call him brother, but he was also willing to put his arm about the helpless, the friendless and the weak and say: "I am thy friend. I am thy protector." And no man, no woman, could be so poor and helpless but they could always come to him and find true justice.

You cannot understand what Solomonic justice means unless you in imagination go and see one of the Oriental rulers holding court in the Far East. Now, the eastern court was not like the western courts. The kings did not appoint certain judges to dispense justice, but on certain days they themselves went into a large open audience place as the great moguls of Delhi used to do. Perhaps I can best describe for you this audience place of King Solomon by describing for you the judgment hall of Akbar the Great as I saw it. This audience place, literally speaking, is no hall at all. The bible dome of heaven is its ceiling. The pillared columns of marble, which find their anchorage in the most exquisite of mosaic floors, merely lift themselves up for adornment and not to support the roof. The reception hall was once one mass of jewels and precious stones. These precious stones were not tossed together in mass as an Italian bed carrier tumbles bricks into a pile. They were arranged in most exquisite designs with reference to size and color. There in jewels the artist pictured the plumage of the birds strutting about in the gardens and the dainty colors of the flowers lifting up their red lips to be kissed by the setting sun and of the rainbows playing among the fountains. There in this wonderland was the peacock throne upon which Akbar the Great sat, which throne alone was supposed to be worth $15,000,000. It was in such an open hall of justice that King Solomon used to sit, and any one who wished could come direct to the King and get justice.

Let us for a little while enter the ezusalem court-to-day. The great Hebrew King has been hearing applicant after applicant. He begins to look weary with his work. No sooner is his last case finished than he turns wearily and say, "Who is next?" With that two women come forward. They are both immoral or bad women, each each laid claim to a little boy as her own. What did King Solomon do? Did he say: "It makes no difference how this judgment goes. They are only social outcasts anyway." Not so thought Solomon's way. He said to himself: "I must help the true mother. I must give her back the baby." He must be sure and make a right decision. I can only do this by a subterfuge."

Then he turns in an indifferent way and says to the executioner: "Don't let this woman bother me about this matter. Let us compromise the case. Cut the baby in two and give each mother a half." The executioner at once falls on her knees and begins to beg for the life of her child, cries: "O King, my King, my good King!" she said. "Save the life of my baby. Let this woman have the child entirely if she will only save my baby's life." The other woman uttered not one word of protest. She merely turned and said: "All right. Let the King kill the child, that it be neither thine or mine." No sooner did she say this than at once in that open court Solomon, with flashing eyes, said: "Give the baby to the weeping woman. She is the true mother." Was judgment ever better rendered? Could a better illustration be presented to show how Christ is always the friend of the weak and the helpless?

Christ is such a Saviour that though we may come to him without a friend and reeking with sin as social lepers, though we may have sinned not only seven times, but seventy times seven, yet if we will only come in his dear name pleading for forgiveness at the cross he will forgive and he will save us. He will not only save one who comes pleading for mercy, but he will save all.

When we talk about King Solomon pleasing his own people we also find Christ the Saviour of the Jew. When we find King Solomon welcoming the Queen of Sheba to his court we find Christ the Saviour of the Gentiles as well. Jesus did not simply come to be a Hebrew Christ. He came to be the world's Christ. Can you not find this symbol in the glorious welcome which the ruler of the Davidic capital gave to this beautiful, dusky Queen of the southland?

Well, what is the use of bothering with the Queen of Sheba?" I hear some of the Cabinet Ministers say to the King. "She is from a country way off to the south. We can never get any trade from her. It takes was a camel out through the desert, and that might be different. But all intercourse with that nation must come overland by camel, and the route is infested with robbers. Why do we not turn and court the affections of those nearer at home?" "Ah," methinks I can hear the great King say, "if we can help any who are in need to me I will help, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, whether they be whites or blacks, whether they be men or women. They shall all be treated alike." And so, standing amid swaying palms and the toadying servants and amid the bowing courtiers of the welcoming King, I learn that when we go forth to Christian work we are not to hem in our gospel invitations by any nationality or by any one social class. We must carry the gospel to all peoples of all climes.

Now comes the practical question. Are you and I willing to come to our Saviour King, as did the Queen of Sheba, who sat at the feet of King Solomon? Are we ready like this Queen of my text, to bring our priceless gifts? Now, the eastern court was not like the western courts. The kings did not appoint certain judges to dispense justice, but on certain days they themselves went into a large open audience place as the great moguls of Delhi used to do. Perhaps I can best describe for you this audience place of King Solomon by describing for you Immortal, traveling this road of death, where are thou going to spend eternity? Speak out of the Land of Sin, will thou leave the far country and come and bow at King Solomon's feet in the Davidic capital? Down on thy knees, immortal! And then when thou hast uttered the publican's prayer the King will lift thee and call thee his child and thy brow will wear a royal coronet. And then—but there! The glory of that moment no human lip may describe. The half of that eternal triumph has never been told and never will be told until, like the Queen of Sheba, we shall be welcomed in the heavenly courts. Yea, the half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me."

Macaulay's Modesty.

Authors are not supposed to be particularly modest in regard to their works, and it is therefore worth while to quote a passage in a letter written by Macaulay to his German publisher, in which the present Baron Tauchnitz carefully preserves: "I have already received £20,000 from Messrs. Longman. I am ashamed to think how many better writers have toiled all their lives without making a fifth part of that sum."

A Substantial Driveway.

A plank driveway into the barn is usually steep (to save planks), and very dangerous and rotting out.

Drive down stakes, as shown in Fig. 1, and fill in between with stones, rubbish and earth, packing it down firmly. When hard and full to the top of the stakes, throw some earth against the outside of the stakes, and sod over the sides, as suggested in Fig 2. Such a driveway gives a long easy rise, is attractive in appearance and will last indefinitely.

PAGE FENCING

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST

When you buy a knife for instance, you consider the quality of the steel in the blade. The biggest and heaviest knife is not necessarily the best. Now there is just as much difference in the quantity and strength of steel in fence wire as there is in a knife blade or razor. The Page Fence is made of a high carbon steel wire, which though it costs you but little more, is fifty per cent. (50%) stronger than wire in other fences. The lightest PAGE fence is its strong as the heaviest of other makes.

Notice the lock in PAGE "EMPIRE" FENCE. You may have noticed also that others are imitating it. That is a good recommend for it. Where we lead others follow.

All PAGE wire is "COILED," not crimped.

Besides the extra strength and superior workmanship, PAGE FENCES are dipped in a special white paint, which on top of the best of galvanizing, will lengthen the life of wire for years. And, also, this white coating makes wire much more sightly.

Owing to the great strength and elasticity of PAGE fencing, one-third less posts are required, thus reducing the cost of the fencing.

As you get in PAGE FENCES one-half more fence strength, greater protection against rust, better workmanship, better appearance, and less posts, can you afford to use other fences, even though you could buy them for one-half the price of the PAGE? But, really ours cost you little, if any more.

In an English village there lived a dull witted boy. It was the custom of the folks to offer him the choice of a penny and a three-penny piece. He had invariably chosen the penny. A stranger saw him one day choose the penny rather than the three-penny bit, and asked him for the reason.

"Is it because the penny is larger?" the stranger asked.

"Naw," was the response, "not 'cause it's the biggest. But when I took the three-penny bit they'd soon stop offering it."

MARY ANN EMPEY.

Wife of Mr. Peter Empey, Murvin st., died on Friday last, aged 67 years. Deceased was a grey haired lady of some weeks previous to her death, which came as a surprise to her many acquaintances. Mrs. Empey was a daughter of the late Mr. Anthony Empey of Empey Hill, Tyendinaga, and was married to her present husband by the late Rev. Dr. Stephenson Methodist parsonage, by the Rev. Francis Berry, forty-five years ago last June. The old stone church, recently demolished, was the scene of their nuptials. She leaves to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother, two daughters, Mrs. Boyle, Napanee, and Mrs. Shibley, Toronto. Also three sisters, Mrs. Alfred Clark, Napanee; Mrs. Joseph Perkins, Frankford, and Mrs. Frank West, Napanee, and two brothers, Mr. Fletcher and Daniel, on the Western Extension. Mrs. Shibley was a life long member of the Methodist church, and a faithful worker in the Sunday school for years. Mr. and Mrs. Empey lived on the old homestead for many years, when they removed to Napanee, where they spent the remainder of their days. The funeral on Monday afternoon was largely attended, many friends returning to the old homestead to pay their last respects to the deceased. The pall bearers were six old friends of the deceased, Messrs. Wm. Hambly, Wm. Hawley, Wm. Hawley, jr., Wm. Hambly, jr., Wm. Empey and Wm. Empey, jr. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful.

New Remedy for Stomach Troubles That Will Cure.

In keeping with their custom of always ordering only the very best remedies as soon as their value has been established, our leading druggists have obtained a supply of Mi-o-na, a remedy for stomach troubles that absolutely cures and relieves the most distressing of the dyspepsia organs.

Until recently it was thought that pepsin was valuable in the treatment of stomach troubles, but it is now known that while pepsin aids in digesting meats, it has no effect upon starchy foods, such as potatoes, rice, bread, etc. Now meat, you know, is the least part of stomach troubles come from indigestion of starchy foods, this makes pepsin absolutely useless in most cases.

On the other hand, Mi-o-na contains no pepsin, acts directly upon the gastric glands, restores the lost functions of the digestive organs, gives flagging nutrition, aids in assimilation of food, and, in fact, so strengthens the whole digestive system that you can eat anything at any time without fear of indigestion.

Weakness, nervousness, sleeplessness, headache, pain and distress after eating, and debility are the result of weak and faulty digestion. Use Mi-o-na, and all these symptoms will be overcome, and you will have perfect health.

Mi-o-na, 50 cent box of Mi-o-na tablets to-day.

If for any reason the best Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist which will be given free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N.Y.

ARDEN.

We are having abundance of rain. The roads are greatly damaged.

Mr. Jas. Bonter left on Monday for camp at Cobourg.

Mr. John Brown is erecting an addition to his store. The upper floor will be finished off for a hall which is very much needed for public gatherings.

Mrs. Rev. A. C. Huffman and daughter returned last week from visiting friends in the front.

Joseph Gordon, sr. is lying dangerously ill, suffering from a paralytic stroke.

The five year old boy of Wilson Thompson, Mt. Vale, was kicked in the forehead by a horse on Friday last. The wound is deep and it is said must be removed or the kick might have proved fatal.

George Scott, son of David Scott, returned from the West recently. It is the arrangements to remove there permanently.

A patriotic demonstration to be held at Arden on the 25th inst., under the auspices of the Conservative Association, of the Riding of Addington, promises to be a great success. Among the speakers announced to give addresses on the occasion are Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, and R. H. Greene, M.P.

The Orange Lodge will celebrate the 12th of July this year with their brethren at Mountain Grove.

The English church service will be held Sunday in the new church, which will be dedicated, we understand, sometime in July.

There has been no minister stationed as yet at Arden, owing to the scarcity of same. This is the first time in the history of the circuit that the Conference has been unable to fill the field.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Simmons, of Tamworth, spent part of Sunday last at her father's, Simeon Loyst.

A special meeting of the Orange Lodge will be held on Friday night next week, when a large number will take the Royal Arch degree.

If your stomach troubles you do not conclude that there is no cure. Hundreds of people have been recently cured by Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. Get a free sample at The Red Cross Drug Store and give them a trial. They also cure constipation and biliousness.—22e

Mr. Webbsdale was present with a grievance from water in his cellar, caused by the canning factory sewer. It is more than one cellar affected by a number of still greater festival, when their sadness and their god took to himself this stranger beauty as a wife. Doubtless, too, he would soon weary of her, and they would be cast together to see her cast from some topmost tower and hear her frail corpse break on the cruel rocks below, or—as had happened to the last queen —to watch her writhe out her life in the pangs of poison, in charge of sorcery. It was indeed a night of festival, and full of promise of rich joys to come.

On rode the brethren, with stern, inscrutable faces, and wondering in their hearts whether they would live to see another dawn. The shouting ceased through them, breaking through the circle of their guards. A hand was thrust up to Godwin; in it was a letter, which the latter took and by the bright moonlight. It was written in English, and brief:

"I cannot speak with you. God be

Then suddenly he wheeled his horse around as it had leapt.

with you both, my brothers, God and the spirit of my father. Strike home, Wulf, strike home. Godwin, and fear not for me who will guard myself. Conquer or die, and in life or death, with love. Together in the flesh, or in the spirit, we will talk—Rosamund."

Godwin handed the paper to Wulf, and, as he did so, saw the latter's head. Then they cast her down, trampled the life out of her beneath their horses' hoofs, and went on laughing. The mob laughed also.

"Fear that paper up," said Godwin. "Wulf the Saxon!"

"Our Rosamund has a brave heart. Well, we are of the same blood, and will not talk her."

Now they were come to the open space in front of the narrow bridge, which, as has been mentioned, were swarming best, on the circling walls, and on the battlements that protected the gate-house of the castle and the houses of the outer city. Before the bridge was a low gateway, and upon it, on a throne, sat Guthrum, clad in his scarlet robe of festival, and, by his side, gleaming bright even on his jewels, Rosamund. In front, dressed in a rich garment, a dagger of gems at her girdle, was the sorceress Ethelwitha or "mouth" Masouda, and behind were dais and guards.

The brethren came to the space before the arch and halted, saluting with their pennoned spears. Then from the further side appeared Canute, Guthrum's son, which opening, revealed the knight Lonelle riding on his great horse. Canute was a tall youth of nineteen, but seemed in his armour.

"What!" he shouted, spurring it up to them. "Am I to fight one against two? Is this your chivalry?"

"Not mine, Canute," answered Wulf, "nay, nay, betrayer of Christian faith to the powers of darkness, but that of the Saxon Godwin, and in right of the laws of Wulf. Kill Wulf and Godwin, reader. Kill Godwin and then you shall fight me. Kill me and then you may fight Godwin."

THE BRETHREN

"Henceforth through life, through death, they serve two ladies," and what he did Wulf did also.

"Mayhap," she answered sadly; "two ladies—but one love."

Then they went, and, creeping through the bushes to the path, wandered about awhile among the revelers and came to the guest-house safely.

Once more it was night, and high above the mountain fortress of Masyat shone the full summer moon, lighting crag and tower as with some vast silver lamp. Forth from the guest-house gate rode the brethren, side by side upon their splendid steeds, and the moon-rays sparkled on their coats of mail, their polished bucklers, blazoned with the cognizance of a grinning skull, their close-fitting helms, and the points of the long tough lances that had been given them. Round them rode their escort, while in front and behind went a mob of people.

The nation of the Assassins had thrown off its gloom this night, for the while it was no longer oppressed even by the fear of attack from Saladin, its mighty foe. To death it was accustomed, death was its daily password; death in many dreadful forms its every bread. From the walls of Masyat, day by day, fedals went out to murder this great one, or that great one, at the bidding of the lord Sinan.

For the most part they came not back again; they waited week by week, month by month, year by year, till the moment was ripe, then gave the poisoned cup or drove home the sharp knife, and escaped or were slain. Death waited them abroad, and if they failed, death waited them at home. Their dreadful caliph was himself a sword of death. At his will they hurled themselves from towers or from precipices; to satisfy his policy they sacrificed their wives and children. And their reward—in life, the dragged out and voluptuous dreams; after it, as they believed, a still more voluptuous paradise.

All frmso o human agony and doom were known to this people; but now they were promised an unfamiliar sight, that of Frankish knights slaying each other in single combat between the silent moon, tilting at full gallop upon a narrow place where many might hesitate to walk, and—the joy! —falling perchance, horse and rider together, into the depths below. So they were happy, for to them this was a night of festival, to be followed by a morrow of still greater festival, when their sadness and their god took to himself this stranger beauty as a wife. Doubtless, too, he would soon weary of her, and they would be cast together to see her cast from some topmost tower and hear her frail corpse break on the cruel rocks below, or—as had happened to the last queen —to watch her writhe out her life in the pangs of poison, in charge of sorcery. Growing Boys and Girls

While it is very gratifying to parents to see their boys and girls grow rapidly, it should not be forgotten that this is a very critical period. There is danger that they may outgrow their strength; there is also danger that the development may not be uniform, that one part of the system is being built up at the expense of the rest, that the bone may not be developing properly, that nerve and brain may lack tone or the muscle may be soft and flabby.

To ensure proper, all round development it is absolutely necessary that the food should be entirely suitable and contain the elements necessary to develop every part of the system.

The ideal food for this purpose is which contains, in proper proportions, the very essentials of life and development, viz: Fat, Iron and Phosphorus. Fat to develop flesh and muscle; Iron for the blood; Phosphorus for the bone, nerve and brain.

If you want your boys and girls to have strong lungs, robust frames, well developed muscles, strong nerves, vigorous brains and rosy cheeks give them FERROL. They will like it, and FERROL never fails.

JOE THE BANKER (3215)

This fine young horse is growing much in favor since his colts have shown up so good. His colts figured prominently at the fall fairs, and owned by Mr. A. W. Price, of Wesley, took first prize, with its dam (not a large mare), in the general purpose class at Napanee, Centreville and Tamworth. Joe is well muscled and a heavy-boned horse, a beautiful dapple brown with small star, has excellent feet and has proved a sure foal-getter."

There is, as always will be, a good demand for this class of horse, and if the breeders of to-day had a regular and adequate supply, a large sum of money would flow into the hands of the farmers.

We expect he will have his ground's stable, Oak Flats, each Monday morning, coming to Moscow at night, where he will remain till Wednesday morning, then go to Joseph Yeomans' for noon, and to A. A. Lasher's, Strathcona, for night; Thursday noon, Yoles, Thorpe, and Camden East for night, returning home Friday noon, and on Saturday to Oak Flats, where he will remain till Monday morning.

NO VAR (3469)

Commonly known by his every-day name, "Sandy," has attained a home for himself in good healthy condition, and has never been over-done, so should be fully as successful a getter this season as he has proved to be in the past one.

We have had a tempting offer to send this fine young horse to New York State for service by a gentleman who saw him here, but we have kept him at home and away, as the farmers here have given us a good patronage, and "Sandy" has a wide reputation as being one of the finest Clydesdales in Ontario. His colts are well and favorably known, some from ten to eleven months old could not be bought for $100 each. Both Sandy and Joe balanced the scales at 1,765 lbs. on April 19th.

P.S.—By request Sandy will be at Camden East Tuesday noons for the balance of the season, and at Geo. Dracup's, Yarker, for support; then go to Enterprise Wednesday afternoons and from there to Centreville Thursday forenoon and home for night, where he will remain the balance of the week.

Health and weather permitting we expect the above routes will be continued. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Parties disposing of their mares before foaling time will be responsible for insurance. Parties tying mares and not returning them must pay full insurance. Service fees payable at Moscow, without further notice, when there are reasonable hopes of mares being in foal. Money sent by registered letter or money order at our risk.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST

When you buy a knife for instance, you consider the quality of the steel in the blade. The biggest and heaviest knife is not necessarily the best. Now there is just as much difference in the quality and strength of steel in fence wire as there is in a knife blade or razor. The Page Co. use a high carbon steel wire, which though it costs you but little more, is fifty per cent. (50%) stronger than wire in other fences. The lightest PAGE fence is as strong as the heaviest of other makes.

Notice the lock in PAGE "EMPIRE" FENCE. You may have noticed that others are imitating it. That is a good recommend for it. Where we lead others follow.

All PAGE wire is "COILED," not crimped.

Besides the extra strength and superior workmanship, PAGE FENCES are dipped in a special white paint, which on top of the best of galvanizing, will lengthen the life of wire for years. And, also, this white coating makes wire much more sightly.

Owing to the great strength and elasticity of PAGE fencing, one-third less posts are required, thus reducing the cost of the fencing.

THE LOCK IN PAGE "EMPIRE" FENCES.

As you get in PAGE FENCES one-half more fence strength, greater protection against rust, better workmanship, better appearance, use less posts, can you afford to use other fences, even though you could buy them for one-half the price of the PAGE? But, really ours cost you little, if any more. ed

Jonks—Do you keep a scrap book? Housekeep—Oh, yes! We do at home. My wife has an account book for household expenses, and one of scrap over that constantly.

Mild in Their Action—Barnster's Vegetable Pills are mild in their action. They do not cause griping in the stomach or any inconvenience there as so many pills do. Therefore, the delicate should take them without fear of unpleasant results. They can, too, so be given to children without imposing the penalties which fellow the use of pills only so carefully prepared.

"You may you had to give the patient chloroform, sir?" asked Jones.

"Yes," replied the dentist, "I had to gas it to him the second time to extract the money."

They Are a Powerful Nervine—Dyspepsia and kidney derangements, loss of nervous system, and nervous debility cause expenditure is difficult to cope with. There age many testimonials as to the efficacy of Dr. Ward's Vegetable Pills in treating this disorder, showing that they never fail to produce good results. By giving proper tone to the digestive organs, they restore equilibrium to the nerve centres.

Time Has Tested It—Time tests all things, that which is worthy lives; that which is imitated to make a welfare perishes. Time has proved Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, as the use of thousand bottles in the early days of its manufacture the demand has risen so that now the production is running into the hundreds of thousands of bottles. What is so eagerly sought for must be good.

"Is it because the penny is larger?" the stranger asked.

"Naw," was the response, "not 'cause it is the largest. But if I took the three-penny bit they'd soon stop offering it.

The Facts as They Are.

Editor of The Beaver,—

At the regular meeting of the Town Council on Monday night, June 18th, Mr Rutlan, the collector of taxes for 1905 made the following statement :

"I have in my possession a number of money belonging to the town. I will not state its amount or how I came into possession of it, unless the Council promise me 10 per cent. of the amount, when I will make an explanation satisfactory to the Council, and will hand over the money to the proper person. If you will not do this "find it."

It was then moved by Mr. Graham, and seconded by Mr. Meng, that the collector be paid ten per cent. on all money that he has collected that was on the roll and all other money he has collected and pay over to the town for which he is to give a full explanation to the satisfaction of this Council. The motion was carried as the following vote :

Yeas—Graham, Lowry, Meng, Normile—4.

Nays—Simpson, Williams—2.

Mr. Ruttan was then called upon by the Mayor to make the above statement, which was as follows :

"By which sum of $1146.16, made up of the following two amounts, $572.60 which the Council agreed to roll, and $573.56 which was the difference between the amount the Treasurer asked for from the collector, and the amount he should have asked him for.

After some discussion it was moved by Mr. Graham, and seconded by Mr. Meng, that the Council accept the statement of the collector as satisfactory, which was carried on the following vote :

Yeas—Graham, Lowry, Meng, Normile—4.

Nays—Simpson, Williams—2.

The next day Mr. Ruttan called on the Treasurer, and paid out to him $572.60, and the Treasurer paid Mr. Ruttan $114.81. At that time the small mail had not been received. The signed cue furnished to the Treasurer.

AN ANGEL OF MERCY.

Since her arrival in Napanee, two years ago, the Deaconess, Miss Carthwright, has endeared herself to many of all our townspeople, and it is with regret that we learned some time ago that she had accepted a position as Deaconess of the Quiscane in our Northwest, and intended leaving our town in June. A number of us have presented with the following address by the members of the W. C. T. U., the sentiments of which will be cordially endorsed on all hands:

Dear Miss Cartwright,—As the time has arrived when you sever your connection with us, as Deaconess, we must give some expression of our appreciation of your life and work among us.

For some time previous to your coming, we realized our inability to successfully carry on one of the most important departments of the W. C. T. U., namely, the Home Missionary Department. This called for mothers' meetings, sewing and kindergarten classes for their children, visiting and benevolent assistance in the aged and infirm, and numerous other duties, which were quite impossible for busy housekeepers to perform. Then it was suggested we secure a Deaconess.

Funds for financial aid were raised some $450 a-piece, but, finally by wise and systematic management of the Executive Committee, we were overcome, and for nearly two years we have had the privilege of your services to have a Deaconess going in and out among us, and to visit our homes, our streets.

We truly say you have fulfilled in yourself, your life and character, as well as in the performance of your many and varied duties, our highest ideal of a Deaconess. A Deaconess should be, You have won the respect of the business portion of the town and of our town officials. You have visited among the poor and more the affection of the social element. You have proved an angel of mercy in homes of sickness and poverty, the little children look upon you as their friend and helper. You have endeared yourself to every member of our Union.

While deeply feeling our loss and knowing that we are greatly missed by all classes, still we recognize your call to a higher field of labor, and we feel encouraged worthy of a larger field of service.

We can assure you that wherever you go in the future, you carry with you the mission of love, either in the home circle or in the community, and you will retain a warm place in our affection, and we shall follow you with prayer for an ever greater interest because of your absence.

We pray God's choicest blessing may attend your future life in whatever field it is sight, and many jewels be in your crown of rejoicing.

Signed on behalf of Napanee W. C. T. Union.

M. E. A. GIBSON,
Napanee, June 26th, 1906.

CATHARINE SHIDLEY,

Mr. E. S. Lapum, and Mrs. W. Thomas, Napanee, are the only children living, of a family of eight. Mrs. Johnson, Napanee, Mrs. Lapum came to reside in Napanee about 20 years ago, and by her kindly disposition and Christian character, soon gathered around her a large circle of friends, who always regret any calamity that befalls them. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church for almost sixty years, and was a kind and sympathetic neighbor, ever ready to help the needy and distressed. The funeral took place from the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Jas. Johnson, on Monday afternoon, and was largely attended by relatives and

CHURCH UNION.

The following is from Bishop Mills' address to Synod last week at Kingston, on the important subject of Church union:

The question of church union is occupying a very prominent place in the public mind between the lines of the Church of England has not been asked to join with Dissenters in the formation of England in Canada has made overtures in these bodies in the past. A standing committee on Union, appointed by the Provincial Synod, has been created for years, with directions to confer with Presbyterians, Methodists and others, as to the possibility of union. But, we when them propose to unite with us? If to God's will, this union may be accomplished. I say, in His good time, least to something more, and soon. The Church of England is ready to-day by day, in her services, prays for union, and in the creed which she requires of her people, she declares it to be a holy Catholic Church. She is willing, as the Lambeth decree shows, to give up even this proposal shows, to give up even this in the interests of Christian union, but very many are some things which she can not give up, because they are trusts committed to her by Almighty God. Thus the Lambeth proposal, or Quadrilateral, as it has been called, is not to the unworking basis of union:

(1) The sufficiency and supremacy of Holy Scripture.

(2) The Apostles Creed as the baptismal symbol, and the adequate statement of the Christian faith.

(3) The two sacraments ordained by Christ Himself, Baptism and the Holy Communion, ministered with unfailing use of His words of institution, and of the elements ordained by Him.

(4) The historic episcopate, locally adapted in its methods of administration to the varying needs of the nations into which the Church of God, in the unity of His church.

He says nothing about the book of Common Prayer, proposes as it is now? The Thirty Articles, or the forms or customs, or the dress of her ministry clergy. She is ready to give up preferences, but not to give up trusts. She did not deem Episcopacy to be received it as a part of the very "essence" of the Church's constitution, but she is ready to agree that it may be locally adapted to the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations, then the fact, indeed has the power to surrender it; and she is the difficulty in the way of union. The Church of England knows the standard of scripture, and is clearly ground against her possess can, which it cannot lawfully abandon. Nor can it be expected that any Christian body will be faithful to her, puts over something outside of her, which is

By Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," etc.

Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

Lozelle heard, and seemed to go mad with rage, or fear, or both.

"Lord Sinan," he shouted in Arabic, "this is murder. Am I, who have done you so much service, to be butchered for your pleasure by the lovers of that woman, whom you would honor with the name of wife?"

Sinan heard, and stared at him with dull, angry eyes.

"Ay, you may stare," went on the maddened Lozelle, "but it is true—they are her lovers, not her brothers. Would men take so much pains for a sister's sake, think you? Would they swim into this net of yours for a sister's sake?"

Sinan held up his hand for silence. "Let the lots be cast," he said, "for whatever these men are, this fight must go on, and it shall be fair."

So a dal, standing by himself, cast lots upon the ground, and having read them, announced that Lozelle must fight the first course from the further side of the bridge. Then one took his bridle to lead him across, and he mounted the brethren he grinned in their faces and said:

"At least this is sure, you also look your last upon the moon. I am avenged already. The bait that hooked me is a meal for vermin like, and to-night I kill you both before her eyes to whet his appetite."

But the brethren answered nothing.

The black horse of Lozelle grew dim in the distance of the moonlit bridge, and vanished beneath the farther archway that led to the outer city. Then a herald cried, Masouda translating his words, which another herald echoed from beyond the gulf.

"Thrice will the trumpets blow, at the third blast of the trumpets the knights shall charge and meet in the centre of the bridge. Whomsoever they may fight as it pleases them, ahorse, or afoot, with lance, with sword, or with dagger, but to the vanquished no mercy will be shown. If he be brought living from the bridge, living he shall be cast into the gulf. Hear the decree of the Al-je-bal!"

Then Wulf's horse was led forward to the entrance of the bridge, and from the further side was led forward the horse of Lozelle.

"Good luck, brother," said Godwin, as he passed him. "Would that I rode this course instead of you."

"Your turn may come, brother," answered the grim Wulf, as he set his lance in rest.

Now from some neighboring tower peeled out the first long blast of trumpets, and dead silence fell on all the multitude. Grooms came forward to look the girth and bridle and stirrup straps, but Wulf waved them back.

"I mind my own harness," he said.

The second blast blew, and he loosened the great sword in its scabbard, that sword which had flamed in his forbear's hand upon the turrets of Jerusalem.

"Your gift," he cried back to Rosamund, and her answer came clear and sweet:

"Bear it like your fathers, Wulf. Bear it as it was last borne in the hall at Steeple."

Then there was another silence—a silence long and deep. Wulf looked at the white and narrow ribbon of the bridge, looked at the black gulf on either side, looked at the blue sky above, in which floated the great globe of the golden moon. Then he leant forward and patted Smoke upon the neck.

For the third time the trumpets blew, and from either end of that bridge, two hundred paces long, the knights flashed towards each other like living bolts of steel. The multitude rose to watch; even Sinan rose. Only Rosamund sat still, gripping the cushions with her hands. Hollow rang the hoofs of the horses upon the stonework, softer and yet softer they fell, ere the next stroke could fall Wulf's arms were about Lozelle, and the fight for life began.

To and fro they reeled and staggered, whirling round and round, till none could tell which of them was Wulf or which his foe. Now they were on the edge of the abyss, and, in that last dread strife for mastery, seemed to stand there still as stone. Then one man heaved to and fro, shaking his head hung over. Further and further he bent, but his arms could not be loosened.

"They will both go!" cried the multitude in their joy.

Look! A dagger flashed. Once, twice, thrice it gleamed, and those wrestlers fell apart, while from deep down in the gulf came the land of a riderless body.

"Which—oh, which?" cried Rosamund from her battlement.

"Sir Hugh Lozelle," answered Godwin in a solemn voice.

Then the head of Rosamund fell forward on her breast, and for a while she seemed to sleep.

Wulf rose, his eyes burned, turned it about on the saddle, and drawing his arms around its neck, rested his head upon it. Then he lifted it, and smiling slowly turned the horse and rode back through the archway to the outer city.

So they gave him a fresh lance, and, presently, at the blast of the trumpets again the horses were seen speeding together over the sun-lit way. They met, and lo! Lozelle, torn from his saddle, but still clinging to the reins, was flung backwards, far backwards, to fall on the stonework of the bridge. Down, too, beneath the mighty shock went his black horse, a huddled heap, and lay there struggling.

"Wulf will fall over him," cried Rosamund. But Smoke did not fall; the stallion gathered itself together—the muscles showed on its flanks—and ere every watcher saw it—and since stop it could not, leapt straight over the fallen black horse—ay, and over his rider beyond—and sped on in its stride. Then the black found its feet again and galloped forward to the further gate, and Lozelle also found his feet and turned to run.

"Stand! Stand, coward!" yelled ten thousand voices, and, hearing them, he drew his sword and stood.

Within three great strides Wulf dragged his charger to its haunches, then wheeled it round.

"Charge him!" shouted the multitude; but Wulf remained seated, as though in unwilling to attack a defenceless man. Next he sprang from his saddle, and accompanied by the horse Smoke, which followed him as a dog follows its master, walked slowly toward Lozelle, as he walked casting away his lance and drawing the great, cross-hilted sword.

Again the silence fell, and through it rang the cry of Godwin:

"A D'Arcy! A D'Arcy!"

"A D'Arcy! A D'Arcy!" came back Wulf's answer from the bridge, and his voice echoed thin and hollow in the spaces of the gulf. Yet they received to hear it, for it told them that he was sound and strong.

Wulf had no shield and Lozelle had no helm—the fight was even. They crouched opposite each other, the swords flashed aloft in the moonlight, from far away came the distant clash of steel, a soft, continual clamour of iron on iron. A blow fell on Wulf's mail, who had nought wherewith to guard himself, and he staggered back. Another blow, another, and another, and back, still back he reeled—back to the edge of the bridge back till he struck against the horse that stood behind him, and, resting there a moment, as it seemed, regained his balance.

Then there was a change. Look, he rushed forward, wielding the great blade in both hands. The stroke lit upon Lozelle's shield and seemed to shear it in two, for in that stillness all could hear the clang of its upper half as it fell upon the stones. Beneath the weight of it he staggered, sank to his knee, gained his feet again, and in his turn gave back. Yes, now it was Lozelle who reeled and swayed. Ay, by St. Chad! Lozelle who went down beneath that mighty blow which missed the head but fell upon his shoulder, and lay there like a dog, till presently the moonlight shone upon his mailed hand stretched upward in a prayer for mercy. From house-top and terrace wall, from soaring gates and battlements, the multitude of the people of the Assassins gathered on either side the gulf broke into a roar that beat up the mountain sides like a voice of thunder. And the roar shaped itself into these words:

"Kill him! kill him! kill him!"

Sinan held up his hand, and a sudden silence fell. Then he, too, screamed in his thin voice:

"Kill him! He is conquered!"

But the great Wulf only leaned upon the cross-handle of his brand, and looked at the fallen foe. Presently he seemed to speak with him; then Lozelle lifted the blade that lay beside him and gave it to him in token of surrender. Wulf handled it awhile, shook it on high in triumph, and whirled it above his head till it shone in the moonlight. Next, with a shout he cast it from him far into the gulf, where it was seen for a moment, like a arc of gleaming light, and the next was gone.

Now, taking no more heed of the conquered knight, Wulf turned and began to walk towards his horse.

Scarcely was his back towards him when Lozelle was on his feet again, a dagger in his hand.

"Look behind you!" yelled Godwin; but the spectators, pleased that the fight was not yet done, broke into a roar of cheers. Wulf heard and swung round. As he faced Lozelle the dagger struck him full in the breast, and well must it have been for him that his mail was good. To use his sword he had neither room nor time, but ere the next stroke could fall Wulf's arms were about Lozelle, and the fight for life began.

So they gave him a fresh lance, and, presently, at the blast of the trumpets again the horses were seen speeding together over the narrow way. They met, and lo! Lozelle, torn from his saddle, but still clinging to the reins, was flung backwards, far backwards, to fall on the stonework of the bridge. Down, too, beneath the mighty shock went his black horse, a huddled heap, and lay there struggling.

"Wulf will fall over," cried Rosamund. But Smoke did not fall; the stallion gathered itself together—the moonlight shone so clearly that every watcher saw it—and since stop it could not, leapt straight over the fallen black horse, and over the rider beyond—and sped on in its stride. Then the black found its feet again and galloped forward to the further gate, and Lozelle also found his feet and turned to run.

"Stand! Stand, coward!" yelled ten thousand voices, and, hearing them, he drew his sword and stood.

Within three great strides Wulf dragged his charger to its haunches, then wheeled it round.

"Charge him!" shouted the multitude; but Wulf remained seated, as though unwilling to attack a horseless man. Next he sprang from his saddle, and accompanied by the horse Smoke, which followed him as a dog follows its master, walked slowly toward Lozelle, as he walked casting away his lance and drawing the great, crosshilted sword.

Again the silence fell, and through it rang the cry of Godwin:

"A D'Arcy! A D'Arcy!"

"A D'Arcy! A D'Arcy!" came back Wulf's answer from the bridge, and his voice echoed this new battle cry in the spaces of the gulf. Yet they rejoiced to hear it, for it told them that he was sound and strong.

Wulf had no shield and Lozelle had no helm—the fight was even. They crouched opposite each other, the swords flashed and in the moonlight; from far away came the distant clank of steel, a soft, continual clamour of iron on iron. Am I, who have done many things for love, to be butchered for your pleasure by the lovers of that woman, whom you would honor with the name of wife?"

Sinan heard, and stared at him with dull, angry eyes.

"Ay, you may stare," went on the maddened Lozelle, "but it is true—they are her lovers, not her brothers. Would you take so much pains for a stick or stake, think you? Would they swim for this net of yours for a sister's sake?"

Sinan held up his hand for silence.

"Let the lots be cast," he said, "for whatever these men are, this fight must go on, and it shall be fair."

So a dal, standing by himself, cast lots upon the ground, and having read them, announced that Lozelle must run the first course from the further side of the bridge. Then one took his bridle to lead him at first and he vowed the brethren he grinned in their faces and said:

"At least this is sure, you also look your last upon the moon. I am avenged already. The bait that hooked me is snared for vengeful fish, and we will kill you both before her eyes to whet his appetite."

But the brethren answered nothing.

The black horse of Lozelle grew dim in the distance of the moonlit bridge, and vanished beneath the farther archway that led to the outer city. Then a herald cried, Masouda translating his words, which another herald echoed from beyond the gulf.

"Thrice will the trumpets blow. At the third blast of the trumpets the knights shall charge and meet in the centre of the bridge. Thenceforward they may fight as it pleases them, ahorse, or afoot, with lance, with sword, or with dagger, but to the vanquished no mercy will be shown. If he be brought living from the bridge, living he shall be cast into the gulf. Hear the decree of the Al-je-bal!"

Then Wulf's horse was led forward to the entrance of the bridge, and from the further side was led forward the horse of Lozelle.

"Good luck, brother," said Godwin, as he passed him. "Would that I rode this course instead of you."

"Your turn may come, brother," answered the grim Wulf, as he set his lance in rest.

Now from some neighboring tower pealed out the first long blast of trumpets, and dead silence fell on all the multitude. Grooms came forward to look the girth and bridle and stirrup strap, but Wulf waved them back.

"I mind my own harness," he said.

The second blast blew, and he loosened the great sword in its scabbard, that sword which had flamed in his forbear's hand upon the streets of Jerusalem.

"Your gift," he cried back to Rosamund, and her answer came clear and sweet:

"Bear it like your fathers, Wulf. Bear it as it was last borne in the hall at Steeple."

Then there was another silence—a silence long and deep. Wulf looked at the white and narrow ribbon of the bridge, looked at the black gulf on either side, looked at the blue sky above, in which floated the great disc of the golden moon. Then he leant forward and patted Smoke upon the neck.

For the third time the trumpets blew, and from either end of that bridge, two hundred paces long, the knights flashed towards each other like living bolts of steel. The multitude rose to watch; even Sinan rose. Only Rosamund sat still, gripping the cushions with her hands. Hollow rang the hoofs of the horses upon the stonework, swifter and swifter they flew, lower and lower bent the knights upon their saddles. Now they were almost met, and they met. The spears seemed to shiver, the horses to hustle together on the narrow way and overhang the edge, then came the black horse towards the inner city, and on sped Smoke towards the further gulf.

"They have passed! They have passed!" roared the multitude.

Look! Lozelle approached, reeling in his saddle, as well he might, for the helm was torn from his head and blood ran from his skull where the lance had grazed it.

"Too high, Wulf; too high," said Godwin sadly. "But oh! if those laces had but field!"

Soldiers caught the horse and turned it.

"Another helm!" cried Lozelle.

"Nay," answered Sinan; "yonder knight has lost his shield. Neither lance—that is all."

So they gave him a fresh lance, and, presently, at the blast of the trumpets again the horses were seen speeding together over the narrow way. They met, and lo! Lozelle, torn from his saddle, but still clinging to the reins, was flung backwards, far backwards, to fall on the stonework of the bridge. Soldiers caught the horse and turned it.

"Another helm!" cried Lozelle.

"Nay," answered Sinan; "yonder knight has lost his shield. Neither lance—that is all."

Reeling in his saddle.

either side the gulf broke into a roar that beat up the mountain sides like the voice of thunder. And the roar shaped itself to these words:

"Kill him! kill him! kill him!"

Sinan held up his hand, and a sudden silence fell. Then he, too, screamed in his thin voice:

"Kill him! He is conquered!"

But the great Wulf only leaned upon the cross-handle of his brand, and looked at the fallen foe. Presently he seemed to speak with him; then Lozelle lifted the blade that lay beside him and gave it to him in token of surrender. Wulf handled it awhile, shook it on high in triumph, and whirled it about his head till it shone in the moonlight. Next, with a shout he cast it from him far into the gulf, where it was seen for a moment, an arc of gleaming light, and the next was gone.

Now, taking no more heed of the conquered knight, Wulf turned and began to walk towards his horse.

Scarcely was his back towards him when Lozelle was on his feet again, a dagger in his hand.

"Look behind you!" yelled Godwin; but the spectators, pleased that the fight was not yet done, broke into a roar of cheers. Wulf heard and swung round. As he faced Lozelle the dagger struck him of the breast, and well must it have been for him that his mail was good. To use the sword he had neither space nor time, but ere the next stroke could fall Wulf's arms were about Lozelle, and the fight for life began.

To and fro they reeled and staggered, whirling round and round, till one could tell which of them was Wulf or which his foe. Now they were on the edge of the abyss, and, in that last dread strain for mastery, seemed to stand there still as stone. Then one man began to bend backwards. See! his head hung over. Further and further he bent, but his arms could not be loosened.

"They will both go!" cried the multitude in their thousands.

Look! A dagger flashed. Once, twice, thrice it gleamed, and those wrestlers fell apart—while from the down in the gulf came the thud of a fallen body.

"Which—oh, which!" cried Rosamund from her battlement.

"Sir Hugh Loselle," answered Godwin in a shaken voice.

Then the head of Rosamund fell forward on her breast, and for a while she also seemed to sleep.

Wulf went to his horse, turned it about on the bridge, and presently his arms encircled his neck and rested for a space. Then he mounted and walked slowly towards the inner gate, while shouts rent the air, and Godwin and Sinan rode out to meet him, and Rosamund awoke and looked up.

"IT IS A MIRACLE!"

Say Hamilton People

Bleeding Piles Cured after Years of Suffering.

Miracles may be put—but the day of saving people from suffering is over-present. What is a miracle? Is it Dr. Chase's Ointment? Some say the only cure is the knife. We say, operations are unnecessary. Read this letter:

For years I had Piles, which protruded and bled terribly. The itching was very distressing at times, especially at night. I suffered so severely it was next to impossible to get a night's rest. I tried many remedies, but with poor success. In the winter, 1904, I purchased of Mr. Mack Shop—I forget the name—a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment and in my room. It relieved me almost instantly. After Ointment and in my room. It relieved me almost instantly. After Ointment and in my room. It relieved me almost instantly. After Ointment and in my room. It relieved me almost instantly. After Ointment and in my room. It relieved several remedies—advised relief. On my return home, Miss Chisholm recommended it and I used it. In only a short time, all the irritations and pains ceased. I am now entirely cured and feel it my duty as a member of the Fire Department, and a citizen of Hamilton, to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all suffering from this annoying complaint.

"that I should give you thanas — but for you must also have become a woman of the Assassins," on an inhabitant of the House of Death."

Then Masouda kissed her cheek and, thrusting her away into the arms of Wulf, said roughly:

"So, pilgrims Peter and John, your patron saints have brought you through so far; and, John you fight right well. Nay, do not stay for our story, if you wish us to live to tell it. What! You have the soldiers' horses with your own? Well done! I did not credit you with so much wit. Now, Sir Wulf, can you walk? Yes; so much the better; it will save you a rough ride, for this place is steep, though not so steep as one you know of. Now set the princess upon Flame, for he can be is surer-footed than that horse, as you may remember, Peter, who know the path will lead it. John, take you the other two; Peter, do you follow last of all with Smoke. And if they hang back, prick them with your sword. Come, Flame, be not afraid, Flame. Where I go, you can come," and Masouda thrust her way through the bushes and over the edge of the cliff, talking to the snorting horse and patting its neck.

A minute more, and they were descending down a mountain ridge so steep that it seemed as though they must fall and be dashed to pieces at the bottom. Yet they fell not, for, made as it had been to meet such hours of need, this road was safer than it appeared, with ridges cut in the rock at the worst places.

Down they went, and down, till at length, panting, but safe, they stood at the bottom of the darksome gulf where only the starlight shone, for the high rays of the low moon could not reach.

"Mount," said Masouda. "Princess, stay you on Flame; let the slaves, who bowed and let me pass. We came to the guards, and to them again I showed the ring. They bowed also, but when they saw that we turned down the passage to the left and not to the right, as we should have done to come to the doors of the inner palace, they would have stopped us."

"Acknowledge the Signet," I answered. 'Dogs, what is it to you which road the Signet takes?' Then they also let us pass.

"Now, following the passage, we were out of the guest-house and in the gardens, and I led her to what is called the prison tower, whence runs the secret way. Here were more guards whom I bade open in the name of Sinan. They said: 'We obey not. This place is shut save to the Signet itself.

"Behold it!' I answered. The officer looked and said: 'It is the very Signet, sure enough, and there is no other. Yet he passed, studying the black stone veined with the red dagger and the ancient writing on it.

"Are you, then, weary of life?' I asked. 'Fool, the Al-je-bal himself would keep a tryst within this house, which he enters secretly from the palace. Woe to you if he does not find his lady there!'

"It is the Signet that he must have sent, sure enough,' the captain said again, 'to disobey which is death.' 'Yes, open, open,' whispered his companions.

DECLARED TO BE DEAD.

The last will of Jos. S. Daly, late of the Township of Erneststown, farmer, who left Canada in the year 1876 to attend the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, and has never since returned, was recently proved in the Surrogate Court of Lennox and Addington. The last communication received from anyone who knew him is a letter from one Floss Hamilton, formerly of Millbrook, written to Mrs. Chas. H. Daly, of Kingston, the Executor named in said will, dated Feby. 21st, 1882, and Mr. Hamilton states in that letter that Mr. Daly had received from Mr. Daly was in the shape of a money order, dated March 27th, 1877, at Sacramento. Mr. Daly, not having been heard of since, has been declared by the Court to be dead. He left over $10,000 worth of property, situate in Erneststown. Mr. W. P. Deroche, Registrar of the Court, informs us that this is the only case of the kind on record in his office.

BITTER WATERS SWEET

WHEN DRUNK WITH KNOWLEDGE AND POWERFUL SELF-CONTROL

BITTERNESS TRANSFORMED

Alchemist of Life is Man's Power to Control Himself in the Bitterest Trials and Sorrows of His Life—How the Christ is Transfigured in the Case of the Sorely Tried Individual Self.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Dyer, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 24.—In this sermon the preacher shows how even the bitterest trials and sorrows of our lives may be transformed into blessings. The text is Exodus xv, 25, "And the Lord shewed him a tree, which when he had cast into the water, the waters were made sweet."

Human nature may be aptly compared to the earth's surface. It was made with hills, lowlands and heights, broad pastures and undulating prairies. Both Dakotas, Bad Lands of the Dakotas. It has Himalayas of imagination, where we see the face of Jesus Christ transfigured before our eyes, and valleys of despond, in which the sunshine of hope never enters, even as the daylight cannot penetrate the catacombs underneath ancient Rome. Yet, strange to say, when we are standing upon the highest pinnacles of spiritual inspiration they are often filled to overflowing with the seeds of stumbling over the steepest precipices of sin. This deplorable characteristic of the human heart is not only true of individuals as it was in the life of Peter when he denied Christ thrice, but it is also true of the spiritual conditions of communities.

Some time ago I read a graphic account of an English tourist ascending the Swiss altitudes. As this gentleman and his party were climbing, they passed through a beautiful village where life in all its rustic simplicity was smiling before their eyes. Hardly had they left this little village and gone a few miles beyond, when one of the guides cried out: "Look! Look! Look! See the avalanche breaking loose!" The Englishman looked, and saw a great mass of snow about three miles in width starting away from its anchorages. With deep intonations, which sounded the death knell not only of cattle and sheep and horses and goats, but of men, women and children, it came tumbling down. In its rapid plunge it literally swept away all vestige of life, and pushed houses and barns and schoolhouses and churches and trees and fences and crops into the canyon below. Nothing was left in the pathway of that onrushing snow but a few bare rocks. Like those avalanches, there are spiritual catastrophes which sweep whole communities from their feet, when the members seem to be treading the highest mountain ranges of hope and are living near to God. The loftier the Matterhorn lifts its rugged brow toward the stars, the easier it is for a Lord Francis Dyke and a Mr. Hudson and a Tangwalder and a Hudson to be hurled into its abysmal depths.

The darkest of clouds as black curtains may be drawn over the bluest of skies; the bitterest winds of skepticism and doubt may reverberate as dolorous echoes to the most gladsome shouts of gospel praise and thanksgiving. It was only three days ago that we find the Israelites so happy that their spiritual gratitude makes them almost besides themselves with joy. In their holy elation and thankfulness to God for their deliverance from the pursuing Egyptians they were like Pa., who described his past spiritual joys in these words: "When I was in Christ about fourteen years ago, whether in the body or whether out of the body I cannot tell (God knoweth). Such a one caught up to the third heaven." Yet, the Hebrew people were in the third heaven only three days ago. They were so happy in their repentant liberation from servitude that they could not keep their feet still, let alone their lips. "Then sung Moses and the children of Israel this song unto the Lord and spake, saying: I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously. The horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea. The Lord is my strength and song, and he is become my salvation, he is my God, and I will prepare him a habitation. My father's God and I will exalt him." But hardly had this song died away when the people began to murmur and denounce God. They said: "What are we going to drink? Here we are in the desert now forty-eight hours, and there is no water but these bitter waters of Marah. Why didst thou not let us stay in Egypt rather than bring us out into this wilderness to perish for thirst?" Then God showed Moses a tree, and the great Lawgiver threw this tree into the bitter waters in the rush, and at once they became sweet.

Wonderful story this, and yet this history is the biography of our own lives. We have all had out times of singing and dancing and praising God upon the banks of the Red Sea. Then we have all had our sudden spiritual reactions, when we have been in the desert with no water to drink but the bitter Marah. Indeed, many of us are standing and complaining at the bitter waters even at the present time. Now, this ought not to be when God has provided a means of transforming these waters. I want to show you this morning where that remedy may be found and to lead you to the tree which will take the bitterness out of the Marah of your lives. I have not, like Moses, to cut down a lean, gnarled, stunted tree which is growing in the Arabian sands. I shall lift the stem or trunk of the tree out of which was made the Calvary cross. By throwing this cross into the bitter waters of our lives which are bubbling up from a breaking heart those fountains will become sweet—aye, as sweet as the pure, life sustaining, limpid waters of the River of Life, which St. John saw in apocalyptic vision "proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb."

First, let us talk about the bitter waters which are now flowing out of the depart places where once grew the luxuriant daises of the visions of our early childhood. When we were boys and girls sitting behind the schoolroom desk we often pictured for ourselves the prosaic conditions of being clerks and farmhands and book canvassers and mechanics and lawyers and stenographers and nurses. But when we thought of ourselves as future men and women we lifted our eyes to the mountains, where we see the face of Jesus Christ transfigured before our eyes, and valleys of despond, in which the sunshine of hope never enters, even as the daylight cannot penetrate the catacombs underneath ancient Rome. Yet, strange to say, when we are standing upon the highest pinnacles of spiritual inspiration they are often filled to overflowing with the seeds of stumbling over the steepest precipices of sin. This deplorable characteristic of the human heart is not only true of individuals as it was in the life of Peter when he denied Christ thrice, but it is also true of the spiritual conditions of communities.

Here we are in the desert now forty-eight hours, and there is no water but these bitter waters of Marah. Why didst thou not let us stay grasp them as did Farragut and Henry Havelock.

"Can it be true," you say, "that I have tasted the bitter waters of the wrecked ambitions of early childhood, but in one sense I have outlived them. It is surprising how time will blunt the keen edge of even the sharpest disappointments. Just as we can forget the pains of the sicknesses of childhood, we can forget about the miscarried hopes and the faded visions of our youth. Now, all I ask of the world is a fair, honest show. That the world seems unwilling to give me. No matter how much I try to do right, the fault finders, the misrepresenters, are always around. Like Socrates, who was compelled to quaff the deadly hemlock, I am continually almost daily to drink of the poisonous sprigs of contention and slander. Truly, like the Psalmist, I can cry out, 'My tears have been my meat day and night, while they (meaning my enemies) say unto me, Where is thy God?' Yes, my enemies doubt whether God loves me, and I am myself almost ready to be skeptical about the divine protection and support."

But there are still other bitter Marah waters which many of us are compelled to drink, one's financial inability to provide for the wants of our loved ones. You say: "Personally I could stand poverty. It does not affect me much. My personal wants are very few and easily satisfied. But it is so hard not to be able to give my dear wife the necessities and a few of the luxuries." Then you look up at me with a sad smile as you say: "You must not think that I have always lived as we are living now. Like many people of this city for whom the wheel of fortune has turned, I, too, have had my better days." My brother, my sister, my child, my friend, to the contrary notwithstanding, I will tell you let Christ lift his atoning cross and push it into the great depths of your financial sea and make the bitter waters of your evil past sweet as the River of Life?

BUSINESS GIRLS.

Need Rich, Red Blood to Stand Worry and Strain of Business Hours.

Business overtaxes a woman's strength. She grows languid, fade under the strain. They risk health rather than lose employment and livelihood away from home in public offices, and business establishments are silent, suffering victims of overwrought nerves at first for want of strength because their blood supply is not equal to the strain placed upon them. Hurry, breathless and nervous, they work against time with wings and fear and headaches. Headaches make every hour like a day. Little wonder their cheeks lose that tint of health and grow pale and thin. Their eyes are dull shrunken and weary; their beauty slowly but surely fades. Business girls and women look older than their years because they need the frequent help of a true food-medicine, strengthening medicine to carry them through the day. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best friend the starved nerves and tired brains of business women. They actually make the rich red blood that imparts the bloom of youth and glow of health to women's cheeks. They bring bright eyes, high spirits and make the day's duties lighter. Twelve months ago Miss Mary Cadeau, who lives at 49 Maynard street, Halifax, N. S., was run down. The least exertion would tire her out. Her appetite was poor and fickle, and frequent headaches added to her distress. The doctor treated her for anaemia, but without apparent results. A relative advised her to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after using a few boxes she says she feels like an altogether different person. She can now eat her meals with relish, the color has returned to her cheeks and she feels better and stronger in every way.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure bloodlessness just as food cures hunger. They are not a purgative medicine, and it is just by making rich red blood that they cure such common ailments as indigestion, dizziness, headaches and backaches, kidney trouble, neuralgia and the special ailments which sap the very life blood and lives of so many women and young girls. Sold by all medicine dealers or by post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Best Flour, Dafoe's Nonesuch, Dafoe's Manitoba Patent

By numerous tests by the best bakers the above brands of flour have been proven to be the best flours in the market.

When buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and patronize the mill that is largely producing Bran and Shorts that you can purchase less than the product of the Western mills, which has to be transported a distance of miles, at great expense and usually, when it reaches you, inferior quality.

The grocer complains if the farmer or the baker patronizes Toronto or to outside points for an article he can get at home, and he is right, but he does not hesitate to buy flour from mills hundreds of miles away, and we put forward our claim for more money that you can purchase the home product, as the high quality which is guaranteed.

Chopped feed and buckwheat flour always on hand. Feed grinding every Saturday. The best Portland cement and Calcined Plaster always in stock.

Also a few tons of best Anthracite coal; also in the market for the purchase of all kinds of grain.

Ask for prices at the mill, telephone, or drop a card. Feed or Coal.

"Doctor," said the patient upon whom the hospital surgeon had just operated for appendicitis, "I suppose I became doctor that amputated the fingers of the man who had his hand caught in the machinery?" "Yes," replied the doctor, "and you got the finger." "Well," said the patient, "I'll have to get another one, then, for you are entitled to it."

THE BURNING OF 'FRISCO.

From Earthquake Times in San Francisco, by Stephen Bonsal, in Harper's Published by permission.

Standing on the hills of 'Frisco,
Heaven help us—what a sight,
Fire and earthquake do combine
On this awful April night!
Artist hand can never paint it,
Man can peak's pen e'er tell
All the horror and the misery
Of this awful day and night.
Hark! the rumbling, grumbling, Rending, crashing, thundering, Wild pandemonium reigns!
Hear the puny human efforts
The would check the fatal course.

Overhead the stars are shining
As they shone on yesternight;
But beneath us men are dying
And a city's glory bright,
Wrapped by that fiery monster
Rushing in its mad delight.
Now on bowed, by fear and shame,
Treating rich and poor alike;
What to it are precious olden
And the days of forty-nine?
Thus it sweeps aristocracy
And the artist's dream divine?

Overhead the stars are shining
In a merciless repose,
But beneath us comes the wailing
And the piteous lament
Of the homeless, pleading shelter
Neath the open firmament.
Hark! the angry flames still roaring
Mid on their resistless way.
Working ever toward the hill lands.
Eastward rushing toward the bay.
Southward o'er the homes of toilers,
Northward o'er the mansions gay;
Till the ashes floating skyward,
Ope the hills to the day.

Now on church aspires heaven pointing
Brighter than elsewhere it looms
Mid spots of chilling flames.
Then adown the ground saloons.
Joy's slang is equally quelled
Then on commerce laden stores,
Gone is fearful fire's pillars,
Not the lewd resorts.
Leaving naught but dust and ashes
And above the awful roaring
Till the eyes grow gray searching
For the heart's pity wrought.

Overhead the stars are shining
Calmly on their steadfast way,
Still unmoved by human pleading
As the they fought from dawn of day.
Hark! the bugle calls the soldiers
Ring across the midnight dire,

Identification For Warships.

The German admiralty has resolved upon furnishing ships of war with means for recognizing each other's identity at distances too great for reading the name of the vessel. This is to be effected by means of rings or bands on the chimney stack, differing in number and color. The colors used will be black, yellow and red, yellow, according to several liberal German journals, the ships of the opposing squadrons frequently mistook a friend for an enemy during the recent manoeuvres, owing to the absence of any means of identification.

Sentenced to "Skidoo."

When Judge Frank Grass, of Muncie, Ind., told Thomas Pellan, an Englishman, before the court on a charge of intoxication, to "skidoo," the young man thought it was a sentence imposed on him and to burst into tears. He had just concluded a plea for his own release, promising to leave town at once if permitted to do so, and the court replied "Skidoo!" With considerable detail the meaning of the slang word was explained to the Englishman, whereupon he thanked the court, and "skidooed."

Provide As Well?

A man owes it to himself to get the best clothes obtainable. He pays his judgment a compliment when he gets a well-made, well-fitting suit of clothes.

He buys because he knows what he is buying.

He exercises judgment—he practices economy.

What he pays for good quality and good workmanship is more than doubled in the return of service and satisfaction.

This all argues for the acknowledged superiority of

THE TOWN LOSES.

Re Cartwright and Town of Napanee; re Knight and Town of Napanee.—Judgment (fi.) on appeal by Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. Knight from the orders of Meredith, C. J., and Meredith, J., (60 W. R. 774), dismissing without costs motion by ratepayers of the town of Napanee to quash a by-law of the Town Council providing for the erection and equipment of a municipal electric light plant, and for the issue of debentures. The appellants contended that certain irregularities in the publication of notices, and the omission to appoint a day for considering in Council invalidated the by-law. It was held below that these omissions were innocuous, and that under sec. 378 of the consolidated municipal act, 1903, the power of quashing conferred was permissive only, leaving the Court always free to settle the difficulty, no order made except that the respondents should pay the appellants the costs of the appeal. W. E. Middleton for the appellants. A. Bruce, K.C., and W. S. Herrington, K.C., for the Town Corporation.

HINCHEY—WILLIAMS.

Christ Church, Tamworth, was once more the scene of a bright and joyous wedding on Wednesday morning, 27th June, when Cecil Claud, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Hinchey, of Adolphustown, and Catharine Edna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Hinchey, were united together in the matrimonial bonds. The Rector of the Parish, Rev. J. W. Jones, being Chaplain of the 47th, was unavoidably detained in Cobourg camp, so the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Rural Dean Dibb. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in a handsome costume of white silk, with orange blossoms at the throat, and in her hair, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses. She was assisted by Miss Ida Williams, sister of the bride, as bridesmaid, and Mr. Ernest Hinchey, brother of the groom, as groomsman. The presents received by the bride's friends were numerous and showed many tokens of good will and friendship. The happy couple left on the C.P.R. at 4 o'clock for a short honeymoon trip to Montreal and other points. They will reside after the honeymoon at Adolphustown.

Is Wife Cross?

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Will Make her Pleasant

Many a woman is irritable, melancholy and hard to live with, just because she is run-down in health. Or perhaps she is suffering from something peculiar to her sex.

Such a woman should get sympathy not blame.

It is really remarkable, however, how soon Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets will make a change in such a woman.

Mrs. D. McDonald, 12 Outremont Terrace, Montreal, says:

"Shortly after taking them I forgot I had any nerves."

Mrs. James Arthur, North Rustico, P.E.I., says:

"Since commencing their use I feel more buoyant, more vitality."

We might go on indefinitely citing the words of those who have had the old time spirits and vigor restored by this remarkable twentieth century preparation for women.

Made Healthy Women.

Give Fair Play to

A really reliable remedy for headache—Zutoo.

If you have got it into your head that Zutoo Tablets will hurt you, you are mistaken.

It isn't fair to us for you to judge Zutoo by the drugging.

It isn't fair to yourself to suffer from headache, when this really harmless vegetable headache cure is within your reach.

The fair thing for both of us is—to judge Zutoo on its merits—to test it.

If you find it does not cure your headache, sick, nervous headache, in two, forty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time—no bad after effects, then discard it.

But do not condemn it unfairly without a trial, and keep on suffering from headaches, when you can get Zutoo, and one trial of Zutoo will prove it.

All we ask for Zutoo is fair play—that you give it a trial before concluding as to its merits or demerits.

Why not do this? You'll be glad ever after if you do.

We'll send trial tablets for nothing, or you can buy them at dealers in 10c. and 25c. packages.

Beloved Pastor Leaving.

THE REV. T. P. O'CONNOR, PARISH PRIEST OF KEMPTVILLE AND SOUTH MOUNTAIN, GOING TO NAPANEE.

AFFECTING FAREWELL.

Kemptville Advance.

The Church of the Exaltation, Kemptville, and St. Daniel's Church, South Mountain, have lost their pastor. Last week, in tears, they bade farewell to the Rev. T. P. O'Connor, in his departure the communities lose one of its worthiest and best loved citizens.

The Rev. Father O'Connor has been parish priest of Kempville and South Mountain for seven years. His pastorate has been distinguished by zealous and successful effort and the church work has prospered materially and spiritually. In those seven years the schools have been erected, the rectory improved, the church and grounds beautified and besides paying for all this, a very large proportion of the church debt has been paid. In all the magnificent sum of sixteen thousand dollars was expended. The work has prospered otherwise and, besides confirming and strengthening his people in their zeal for the church the pastor has always fostered a broad-minded and tolerant spirit among his parishioners. Catholic and Protestants alike regret his departure. He was more than merely popular; he was greatly loved and justly so.

The parish over which the Rev. T. P. O'Connor has presided as pastor for seven years, is a very large one, extending from beyond Burrill's Rapids, on the Matabooz side almost to Winchester. The labors were heavy and have proven too severe a strain upon the pastor's constitution ill health is the cause of his removal to Napanee, where the work will be lighter.

Father O'Connor said farewell to his people at the Church of the Exaltation, Kempville, last Sunday morning. The entire parish turned out and a large number of Protestants were also present. The service proved a most affecting one, both pastor and people being overcome with emotion. At ten o'clock mass was solemnized by the Rev. Father Twomey after which a number of prominent members of the congregation read to Father O'Connor, their retiring pastor, at the pulpit, and presented him with a purse of gold accompanied by the following beautifully worded address.

Kempville, Ontario,
June 24th, 1906

To Rev. T. P. O'Connor,

Reverend and Dear Father:

We the members of the church of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, Kempville, have learned with deep regret of your resignation and your departure from our midst, more especially in considering the condition of your health, rendering it necessary and as a consequence you are compelled to seek a mission where the work will not be so heavy.

We feel that we would not be fulfilling the dictates of our own feelings if we did not tender to you some evidence of our high appreciation of your efforts and zeal in your administration of the affairs of the church of Kempvass and sympathy we have received from you during the seven years you have been with us, we would indeed be void of gratitude if we did not try to express our thanks.

Your unselfishness and example many times filled our hearts with hope and encouraged us to put better thoughts and deeds when the spirit was weak within us and the tempter strong without. Your excellent business ability and energy in your many efforts to reduce the large debt on our beautiful Church, demand our most grateful and sincere thanks and your labor no doubt helped to undermine your health.

Your work in this scattered mission has been no light task, and we fully appreciate the many difficulties and hardships you have undergone. While you have had your sympathy in our trials and troubles and always a kind advice and encouragement also pecuniary aid at all times to help us in our many material and temporal needs, spurring us on to do that which is right in the sight of heaven and salvation and the risk to health and life you have run in order to reach the sick members of your widely spread congregation.

We ask you to accept this purse not as a reward for the value of your services as our Priest, but as a token of our gratitude for your esteem and respect in which you are held by the members of the congregation of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross" and our prayers are that the Giver of all good will carefully guide you and if pleasing to His Holy Will restore you again fully to perfect health and strength, that this blessing will attend your during life and that the hour of death you will be found worthy to hear from the lips of the Master, "well done good and faithful servant," because you have labored well over few things, I will make thee ruler over many."

Signed on behalf of the members of the Church of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, Kempvaille.

D. M. Laughlin,
John Slavin,
P. J. Roche,
Committee.

Replying to the address, the Rev. Father O'Connor said: "I am deeply pleased with profoundest feelings of gratitude to Almighty God for the kind and affecting. There are times, especially on an occasion like this, when even through Divine Providence we are compelled to separate, that words become inadequate. It is impossible for me to express my feelings as I receive such evidence of charity and appreciation shown by our separated brethren of the South Mountain. I am grateful from my heart for this beautiful purse. Now Christ is your which unites all our people. I must thank Mrs. Twomey especially for their labor and sacrifice and the kindness shown me. That devotion and fidelity I shall never forget until the day I die. I also wish at this time to express my appreciation of the true Christian spirit of charity and generosity

For the Stomach Heart and Kidneys

Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a Cause Cure—not a Symptom Cure.

It is common mistake to take artificial stimulants for stomach troubles—or heart stimulants for weak heart—or so-called kidney plasters for diseased kidneys. These organs do not set separate or of their own accord—they have no control themselves—and not once in 50 times is the weakness the fault of the organ—but of the nerves which control the organ—and don't through these nerves can stomach, kidney or heart disease be cured. Dr. Shoop of Racine, Wisconsin, learned by his medical experience that all stomach, heart and kidney ills are nerve—that through them, and them alone can these ailments be cured. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is known as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. It relieves the pain and distress of either stomach and heart troubles quicker even than those medicines designed simply to give temporary relief. Dr. Shoop's Restorative can now be had of druggists everywhere. For sale and recommended by

By Elder Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," etc.

Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

At the rise of the opposing slope the strength of Flame and Smoke at last began to fail beneath their double burdens. They panted and trembled, and rage in short, rushes, no longer to answered to the spur. The Assassins saw, and came on with wild shouts. Nearer and nearer they drew, and the sound of their horses hoofs beating on the sand was like the approach of thunder. Now once more they were fifty yards away, and now but thirty, and again the spears began to flash, though none struck them.

Masouda screamed to the horses in Arabic, and gallantly did they respond, plunging up the hill with slow, convulsive bounds. Godwin and Wulf looked at each other, then, at a signal, cheeked their speed, leapt to the earth, and, turning, drew their swords.

"On!" they cried, and lightened of their weight, once more the reeling horses plunged forward.

The Assassins were upon them. Wulf struck a mighty blow and emptied the saddle of the first, then was swept to earth. As he fell from behind him he heard a scream of joy, and struggling to his knees, looked round. Lo! from over the crest of the rise rushed a squadron upon squadron of turbaned cavalry, who, as they came, set their lances in rest, and shouted:

"Salah-ed-din! Salah-ed-din!"

The Assassins saw also, and turned to fly—too late.

"A horse! A horse!" screamed Godwin in Arabic; and presently—how he never knew—found himself mounted, and charging with the Saracens.

To Wulf, too, a horse was brought, but he could not, struggle to its saddle. Thrice he strove, then fell backwards and lay upon the sand, waving his sword and shouting where he lay, while Masouda stood by him, a dagger in her hand, and with her Rosamund upon her knees.

Now the pursuers were the pursued, and dreadful was the reckoning that they must pay. Their horses were outworn and could not fly at speed. Some of the fedai were cut down upon them. Some dismounted, and gathering themselves in little groups, fought bravely till they were slain, while a few were taken prisoners. Of all that great troop of men not a score won back alive to Masyaf to make report to their master of how the chase of his lost bride had ended.

A while later and Wulf from his seat upon the ground saw Godwin riding back towards him, his red sword in his hand. With him rode a stately, bright-eyed man gorgeously apparelled, at the sight of whom Rosamund sprang to her feet; then, as he also dismounted, ran forward and with a little cry cast her arms about him.

"Hasan! Prince Hasan! Is it indeed you? Oh, God be praised!" she gasped then, and but that Masouda caught her, would have fallen.

The Emir looked at her, her long hair loose, her face deathly pale, her veil torn, but still clad in the silk and gleaming gems with which she had been decked in honour of the effect of Al-bal. Then low to the earth he bent his knee, while the grave Saracens watched, and taking the hem of her garment, he kissed it.

"Allah be praised indeed!" he said, "I, His unworthy servant, thank Him from my heart, who never thought to see you living more. Soldiers, salute your princess the lady Rose of the World, princess of Baalbec and Sheik of your lord, Salah-ed-din, Commander of the Faithful."

Then in stately salutation to this disheveled, unkempt, and yet queenly woman, uprose hand, and spear, and scimitar, while Wulf cried from where he lay:

"Why, it is our merchant of the drugged wine—one other! Oh! Sir Saracen, does part of that contract of that chapman's trick shame you now?"

The emir Hassan heard and grew red, muttering in his beard.

"Like you, Sir Wulf, I am the slave of Fate, and must obey. Be not bitter against me till you know all."

"I am not bitter," answered Wulf, "but I always like to drink, and as we will settle that score yet, as I have sworn."

"Hush!" broke in Rosamund. "Although he stole me, he is also my deliverer and friend through many a peril, and it is ill luck for him, by now—" and she shuddered.

"I do not know all the story, but, Princess, it seems to me that we should thank not me, but these goodly cousins of yours and those splendid horses," and Hassan pointed to Smoke and Flame, which stood by quivering, with hollow flanks and drooping heads.

"Truly a brother I am not, but I must thank also, this noble woman, as you will call her also when you hear the story," said Rosamund, flinging her arm about the neck of Masouda.

"My master will reward her," said Hassan. "But oh! lady, what must you think of me who seemed to desert you so basely? Yet I reasoned well, in that castle of that son of Satan, Sinan," and he spat upon the ground, "I could not have aided you, for there he would only have butchered me. But by escaping I thought that I might help, so I bribed the Frankish knave with the priceless Star of my House, and he touched the great jewel that he wore in his turban "and with what money I had, to loose my bonds, and while he pouched the gold I stabbed him with his own knife and fled. But this morning I reached yonder city in command of ten thousand men, charged to rescue you if I could; if not, to avenge you, for the ambassadors of Salah-ed-din informed me of your plight. An hour ago the watchmen on the towers reported that they saw two horses galloping across the plain beneath a double burden, pursued by soldiers whom from their robes they took to be Assassins. Then I have a quarrel with the Assassin, I crossed the bridge, formed up five hundred men in a hollow, and waited, never guessing that it was you who fled. You know the rest—the Assassins—I know it also, for," he added grimly, "you have been well avenged."

"Follow it up," said Wulf, "and the vengeance shall be better, for I will show you the secret way into Masyaf—if, if I cannot, Godwin will—and there you may hurl Sinan from his own towers."

Hassan shook his head and answered:

"I should like it well, for with this magician my master also has an ancient quarrel. But he has other feuds upon his hands," and he looked meaningly at Wulf and Godwin, "and my orders were to rescue the princess and no more. Well, she has been rescued, and some hundreds of heads have paid the price of all that she has suffered. Also, that secret way of yours will be safe enough by now. So there I let the matter bide, glad enough that it has ended thus. Only I warn you all—and myself also—to walk warily, for since if I know aught of him, Sinan's fedais will henceforth be his eyes and ears every one of us, striving to bring us to our ends by murder. Now here come fifteen; enter them—all of you, and be borne to the city, who have ridden far enough to-day. Fear not for your horses: they shall be fed in gently and saved alive. It skill and care can save them, I go to count the slain, and will join you presently in the citadel."

So the bearers came and lifted up Wulf, and helped Godwin from his horse—for now that all war over he could scarcely stand—and with him Masouda and Rosamund placing them in the litters, they carried them, escorted by cavalry, across the bridge of the dreaded Assassins, and entered where they lodged them in the citadel.

Here also, after giving them a drink of barley gruel, and rubbing their backs and legs with ointment, they led the horses Smoke and Flame, slowly and with great trouble for these could hardly stir, and laid them down on thick beds of straw, tempting them with food, which after awhile they ate. The poor beasts slept, while Godwin and Wulf—ate also of some soup with wine in it, and after the hurts of Wulf had been dressed by a skilled doctor, went to their beds, whence they did not rise again for two days.

CHAPTER XVI.

On the third morning Godwin awoke to see the rays of sunrise streaming through the latticed window. They fell upon another bed-by where Wulf still lay sleeping, a bandage on his head that had been used in the last charge against the Assassins, and other bandages about his arms and body, which showed how gallantly in the fight upon the dreadful bridge.

Wondrous was it to Godwin to watch him there thus sleeping healthfully, notwithstanding his injuries, and to think of what they had gone through together with so little harm; to think, also, of how they had rescued Rosamund out of the very mouth of that earthly hell of which he could see the peaks through the open window-places of the tall towers, and of that fiend, its ruler. Reckoning the tale day by day, he reflected on their adventures since they left Jerusalem, and saw how Heaven had guided their every step.

In fact the warnings that were given them, to visit the Al-je-bal in his stronghold had seemed a madness. Yet there, where they could have thought that she would be, they had found Rosamund. There they had been avenged upon the false knight Sir Lovelle, who had betrayed her, first to Saladin, then to Sinan, and sent him down to death and judgment; and thence they had rescued Rosamund.

Oh, how wise they had been to obey the dying words of their uncle, Sir Andrew, who doubtless from above foresight at the end! God and His saints had helped them, who could not have helped themselves, and his minister had been Masouda. But for Masouda, Rosamund would by now be lost or dead, and they, if their lives were still left to them, would be wanderers in the great land of Islam, seeking for one who never could be found.

Why had Masouda done these things, again and again putting her own life upon the hazard to save theirs and the honor of another woman? As he asked himself the question Godwin felt the red blood rise to his face. Because she hated Sinan, who had murdered her parents and her betrothed her, she said; and doubtless that had to do with the matter. But it was no longer possible for him to think. She loved him, and had loved him from the first hour when they met, he had always suspected it—in that wild trial of the horses upon the mountain side, when she sat with him there about him and her face pressed against his face; when she kissed his feet after he had saved her from the lion, and many another time.

But as they followed Wulf and Rosamund up to mountain peaks, while the host of the Assassins thundered at their heels, and in broken gasps she had told her life story, it became plain to him that she loved him more than he had said that he held her not vile, but noble, and that a woman looks upon her only love—a message in her eyes that no man could fail to read. Yet if this were so, why had Masouda saved Rosamund, the lady to whom she knew well that he was sworn? Reared among those cruel folk who could wade to their desire through blood and think it honor, would she not have left her rival to her doom, seeing that oaths do not hold beyond the grave?

An answer came into the heart of Godwin, at the very thought of which he turned pale and trembled. His brother was also sworn to Rosamund, and she in her soul must be sworn to one of them. Was it not to Wulf, Wulf who was handsomer and more strong than he, to Wulf, the conqueror of Lassele? Had Rosamund told Masouda this? Nay, surely not.

Yet women can read each other's hearts, mysteries hidden through which no man may see, and perchance Masouda had read the heart of Rosamund. She stood behind her during the dreadful duel at the gate, and watched her face when Wulf's death seemed sure; she might have heard words that broke in agony from her lips in those moments of torment.

Oh, without doubt it was so, and Masouda had protected Rosamund because she knew that her love was for Wulf and not for him. The thought was very bitter, and in its pain God-win groaned aloud, while a fierce jealousy of the brave and handsome knight who slept at his side, dreaming, doubtless, of the fame that he had won and the reward by which it would be crowned, gripped his vitals like the icy hand of death. Then God-win remembered the oath that they two had sworn far away in the Priory at Stangate, and that love passing the love of woman which he bore towards this brother, and the duthy of a Christian warrior whereto he was vowed, and hiding his face in his pillow he prayed for strength.

It would seem that it came to him —at least, when he lifted his head again the jealousy was gone, and only the great grief remained. Fear remained also—for what of Masouda? How should he deal with her? He was certain that this was no fancy which would pass—until her life passed with it, and, beautiful as she was, and noble as she was, he did not wish her love. He could find no answer to these questions, save this—that things must go on as they were decreed. For himself, he, Godwin, would remain true to his duty, to keep his hands clean, and await the end, whatever that might be.

Wulf woke up, stretched his arms, exclaimed because that action hurt him, grumbled at the brightness of the light upon his eyes, and what with he was very hungry. Then he arose, and with the help of Godwin, dressed himself, and in his armour. Soon, with the yellow-coated soldiers of Saladin, guarding him and watchful, pacing before their door—for night and day they were trebly guarded lest Assassins should even by-chance find a no need for mail. In the fortress of Masyaf, indeed, where they were also watched, but by friends, they would have left their swords in the armoury, and when they ate, Godwin and Wulf—ate also of some soup with wine in it, and after the hurts of Wulf had been dressed by a skilled doctor, went to their beds, whence they did not rise again for two days.

He came forward, lifting his head.

the prince Hassan sank to his knees and touched the marble with his forehead, and, kneeling, that they were in the presence of the mighty monarch Saladin, the brethren saluted in their western fashion. Presently the Sultan spoke in a low, even voice to Hassan, to whom he motioned that he should rise, saying:

"I am sure that you trust these knights, Emir," and he pointed to their swords, "or you would not have brought them hither."

"Sire," was the answer, "I trust them as I trust myself. They are brave and honourable men, although they be Infidels."

The Sultan stroked his beard.

"Ay," he said, "Infidels. It is a pity, yet doubtless they worship God after their own fashion. Noble to look on also, Ikka their father," whom I remember well, and, if all I hear is true, brave indeed. Sir Knights, do you understand my language?"

"Sufficiently to speak it, lord," answered Godwin, "who have learned it since childhood, yet ill enough."

"Good. Then tell me, as soldiers to a soldier, what do you seek in Salah-ed-din?"

"Our cousin, the lady Rosamund, who, by your command, lord, was stolen from our home in England."

Then Godwin answered:

"Sire, we love her, and are affianced to her."

The Sultan stared at them in surprise.

"What! Both of you?" he asked.

"Yes, both."

"And does she love you both?"

"Yes," replied Godwin, "both, or so she says."

Napanee's Greatest Store

Store Shut Up Tight on Friday Afternoons Until After 17th August.

This is in order to give our clerks a chance to get fresh air during the hot months.

Our object will be to make this store as comfortable as a store can be in summer. On hot days it is cooler here than the shady side of the street. You are welcome on any hot day that you are down town to come in and rest and enjoy yourself, look around at the pretty things as much as you like; even if you don't want a thing, you are welcome.

You see, this is no longer a mere store, but a great public institution. We owe you good service, just as the railroads owe you good cars and plenty of them.

As for business—all former records are being surpassed month by month, and thus the store is moving ahead.

We would count it a favor if our customers would write or tell us wherein we are lacking in good storekeeping. We will appreciate your suggestions and if possible and practicable will follow them out.

NEW EOLIENNES.

Eolienne is a silk and wool fabric, woven in a very small cord similar to Poplin, but very much finer and not near as stiff or heavy. The larger proportion being silk makes it very bright and rich looking. Colorings all come out clear and perfect. Good dressers favor Eoliennes because they do not have the over dressed appearance of all silk, and can be used almost any season of the year. They are just as suitable for a Dinner Gown as for a Ball or Wedding Dress. They are much used for dressy afternoon and evening wear. Just opened fourteen pieces in seven different shades. Regular city price would be dollar a yard. We're going to keep up our "Pushing Dress Goods Campaign" by selling these at 75 Cents Yard.

Two weaves, plain and spot. Seven shades. The New Pink, New Pearl, Cream, Sky, Claret, Bisque, Black. The spot is the small pin head type, formed with all silk on the silk and wool back ground. Width, 44 inches. We will be pleased to submit samples by mail. It only costs a few cents to send a dress pattern by mail anywhere in the Dominion.

TOURISTS FROM UNITED STATES, ATTENTION!

RAILWAY FARES SAVED.

Please make a note of the above item. These Eoliennes are made in France. Your prohibitive duty on imported goods would cause similar qualities to be sold in New York at about $1.50 yard. Dressmaking charges in Napanee are about half the usual Yankee charges. If you have a need for one or more gowns you can save railway fare for a thousand miles or more. If interested let us hear from you.

Real Irish Linens for our American Friends.

Every housekeeper is interested in fine Linens. We have the control for Napanee of certain makes of Irish Linens that are recognized and known the world over as being the best. "Old Bleach Linens" from Randalstown, Ireland, Gold Medal Linens made by Wm. Liddell & Co., Ltd., of Belfast, and Richardson, of Belfast, are all familiar makes to linen buyers. It is such reliable makes as these that has placed confidence in our linen business.

Bring your American visitors here if you wish them to see pure Irish Linen at less prices than they are accustomed to.

Soap Shrunk Serges and Cheviots.

We believe that we are the only dry goods people to show soap shrunk fabrics in this district. We are now making a good showing in creams, greys and the new greens. Our American visitors can tell you how good a thing is the "Soap Shrunk Idea."

Shirt Waist Bargains.

A Shirt Waist manufacturer had a lot of broken lots of white Shirt Waists. A quarter dozen of this, a half of that and so on. He knew we had an outlet for a good big jag of them and sent them on to us at a clearing price. We put them right in stock for immediate selling. In Ready-to-wear Section for Women's wear, first floor.

Women's Imported Rain Coats.

A new lot just came to hand. The kind that will protect your dresses in a rain as well as a shower. Made from good substantial English Cravenettes and Waterproof Coverts. The very latest styles, not extreme but away from the same old thing that everybody shows. There was a time when women wanted to wear exactly the same as everybody else, not so nowadays. The well dressed stylish woman wants and has a style of her own. We're here to help her out and prices are very reasonable. One American woman told us this week that our raincoats at 10.00 were equal to Chicago coats at 25.00. We're getting lots of business from American visitors. They know it pays.

The New Skirt Binding--Silkette.

The light weight dress goods and pleated skirts created a need for a new binding. Stiff harsh bindings would not do. Silkette is the new invention made in a new way. All desirable shades. 5 cts. a yard.

A NATION'S LIFE CANCER

U. S. FOUNDATIONS ARE MENACED BY DOMESTIC FOES.

MUNICIPAL CORRUPTION RIFE

Rev. Dr. Talmage Preaches His Fourth of July Sermon and Patriotically Attempts to Induce the People to Scotch the Evils in the Body Politic —Where and How to Begin the Crusade Pointed Out In Clear-Cut Fashion.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Dyer, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 1.—In this sermon the preacher makes a powerful appeal for an independence which shall result in the redemption of our cities from official corruption. The text is Jeremiah vii, 17, "Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah?"

This is the Sunday preceding the national holiday. This is the hour when thousands of patriotic sermons are being preached over this land, most of them in eulogistic strain. I want this morning to place my finger upon the most flagrant weakness of our national life. This is not the weakness of national or state legislation. It is the weakness of municipal corruption, which we find in most of the large cities scattered over our land. The cancer which is gnawing and eating toward the vitals of man's physical body is even more fatal in its results than the dangers which are threatening him from without. Indeed, the only enemies which are threatening to undermine our national foundations are domestic foes and not foreign invaders.

Most great statesmen are as loath to enter an international controversy as the present head of the German empire. Some years ago the young emperor was looking at the Verestchagin picture depicting Napoleon's invasion of Russia. He said, "Verestchagin, never did the judgment of God so plainly strike man as it struck Napoleon at Moscow." Then he looked a little longer at the picture and said, "Verestchagin, your pictures are an excellent corrective of warlike appetites. Then he turned his head again and said to Verestchagin, the statesman who would needlessly plunge his country into international conflict is a fool." Emperor William shudders at the thought of war. The great statesmen, both treated and Atlantic, have the same dread. The one great purpose of their lives is to prevent international complication, in all probability, you and I will never live to see the day when the states shall be plunged against another first-class nation. Thus in our present patriotic sermon let us turn our attention to the perils rather than external dangers—namely, corruption in our municipal or city governments. Some of the worst political cities are to be seen everywhere. Either we must conquer them or they in turn will conquer us and our children.

The civic problem of our land will never be successfully solved until the American voter has intelligence and manhood enough to divorce national and state politics from municipal affairs. The city politics, the national and civic, are entirely distinct. The one to a great extent does not represent personalities, but principles, while, on the other hand, civic politics does not represent principles at all, but such as personalities. Let me try to illustrate the demarcation in a few words.

Come back with me to the year 1896. Major McKinley of Ohio is the candidate upon the Republican ticket for President of the United States. He is the logical representative of his party, upon the sole issue that he was the author of the famous McKinley bill, which established high tariff. Now, if Mr. McKinley is elected to the Presidency he can do absolutely nothing to forward his ideas of protection unless he has a Congress behind him which will pass protection laws. Thus all over the country the Republicans of the different congressional districts assemble and pick out men who believe in protection to support the future Presidential on his policy. You can readily see why they do this. When we elect a Congressman we do not elect a personality so much as we vote for a principle. The national convention controls a political platform. Then the different congressional conventions of the party nominate men who will pledge themselves to support that platform. Thus the whole national policy of the "unit man" is an insignificant matter of sand. But when all these men are collected together in one great volume we have the national policy, or the principle of the great Government political party, expressed in one mighty chorus sounding together as one voice.

Now, on the other hand, the government of one city has nothing to do with the tariff laws or with the advocacy of a free silver bill. It has nothing to do with the question whether the Philippines shall have self government, as in Cuba. It has nothing absolutely nothing, to do with national or state politics. A city government has simply to do with what is a big business. It has to do with the public schools, and with the water supply, and with the lighting of our streets, and with our street railway system, and with the control of our police and fire departments. Any man who is a strong, honest, upright, intelligent business man can run any city government aright, be he a Republican or a Democrat, or an adherent to any of the other sane political faiths. And yet the local political "bosses" of a city inevitably hold the municipal governments in their grasp by mixing up state and national issues with civic affairs. They nominate their candidates. Then they come to the voters and say: "Now, be consistent. If you are going to vote for a Republican President, you must vote for a Republican mayor and a Republican city attorney and a Republican councilman. These men all represent the great Republican truths." And never was greater nonsense ever penetrated upon a blinded community than that of bedeviling on the mayor and council being of the dominant political party.

Do you believe this is political heresy? Then read the following words of Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States: "Mr. Bonaparte well declares that most of the municipal corruption of this country is directly due to harnessing national and state civic issues in the same yoke. Let me read to you his own strong, powerful, intense words: 'The essence of municipal affairs has no rational relation to the conduct of national affairs, and while it does not seem possible to eliminate from municipal elections the system of nominating party tickets, there ought certainly to be cultivated a much wider spirit of independence at municipal elections in the scrutinizing of proposed action and the ballot by either party than is likely to be ever exercised with reference to state and national elections.'

But in order to solve the civic problem aright we must do more than separate national politics from municipal affairs. We must in our city politics have the right kind of men. We must prevail upon the most respected citizens of the different cities to offer themselves as candidates for the different municipal offices. The kind of men who are willing to accept the gubernatorial and the congressional and presidential offices are the same kind who should be willing to be elected to the mayoralty or to the city councilmanship in our city governments.

"Oh," but you say, "our prominent men in professional and business life cannot afford to take the humble positions of a city government. Besides, the emoluments do not compensate that they do not feel called upon to neglect their stores or offices for such petty emoluments." Nonsense, my friend, nonsense! The question of financial remuneration should be a secondary one in our offering the city positions to our most prominent citizens. We should look upon our city positions in the same as they do in England or Scotland or Australia or New Zealand. There the people, no matter how wealthy or prominent they may be, feel it an honor to be called an alderman of Glasgow, or Edinburgh, or London, or Melbourne, or Sydney. For years Lord Rosebery and the Duke of Devonshire and John Burns, the labor leader, worked side by side in the London county council. The most prominent towns of those countries you can find the most prominent citizens of all political parties wending their way aldermen. The simple fact is we want that spirit that says: "When duty calls for the greatest of men, he is not wrong to go for the greatest of men, no matter whether he be merchant prince or legal luminary." As soon as some of our prominent business and professional men are willing to make necessary sacrifices of time for the municipal offices, then these positions will be sought after by our prominent men, and the congressional and senatorial and gubernatorial conventions now call to the front almost any man for whom they indicate a preference.

But there is still another reason beside honor and fame why our most prominent citizens should be prevailed upon to assume the municipal burdens of official life. If a man will not serve his city at a financial sacrifice, then in truth he will not serve his country and his city faithfully even if he had to make no financial sacrifices. The simple fact is that our political, our educational and civic life, has never been able to financially reward its true servants adequately. Let me say that I believe that Webster and Clay and Calhoun and Washington and Jefferson and Robert E. Livingston and Judge Story and Marshall and Samuel J. Randall could have made fabulous sums, twenty times more money if they had never entered public life? Do you believe that our soldiers would fight for the defense of their native land were ever adequately paid for spilling their life's blood.

Do you mean to tell me that those men financially were adequately paid for shedding their heart blood? Why, some of those men could have been making their thousands of dollars at home if they had not gone into the Union army. Yet some of those soldiers for a mere pittance of $16 a month were ready to lay down their lives for their country's defense. Now, I want to ask you this question, Are all the heroes of this nation dead? Why, I believe men and women are just as ready to make sacrifices for their country now in these times of peace as they were in 1861 and 1812 and 1776. And I furthermore believe that most prominent citizens of our large cities will serve us in municipal offices if we only go at it in the right way. In those civic problems, which we have to solve let us divorce municipal politics from state politics. And, in the next place, let us nominate for our city offices not the professional politicians, but the business men, the merchants and lawyers and physicians and bankers and brokers, and serve us. Come and help us, you fellow citizens, now in the night of your. And as Admiral Dewey quickly volunteer their services in times of war, so I believe these prominent merchants and lawyers and doctors, aye, and ministers, will come to the rescue of our cities in times of peace.

But we must not simply look at our municipal candidates when we attempt to rescue our cities from their present political corruption. We must also weigh carefully in the balance the men by whom these candidates are being selected. There is not one municipal candidate in ten thousand who will announce himself as a candidate for a city or county office as did William Travers Jerome for the district attorneyship of New York City. A man as a candidate for a public office is inevitably the candidate of certain men and belongs to a certain class. The true idea certain men, like Governor Fold of Missouri, may be better than the men who nominated them, yet, as a rule, in the political world the better never rises higher than its source. When a man is nominated by a convention for a city office he is, as a rule, no better and no worse than the men who want to elect him to that office. Therefore if you would elect the kind of municipal candidates who are running all you have to do is to go among the men and find out what kind of men they are who want that candidate elected. In other words, you can nearly always judge a man politically by the company he keeps.

This statement naturally brings me to the last and perhaps the most important heading of all the discussion. If you refuse to vote for a man who is a candidate for municipal office and whom the bad men want, then comes the practical question: Are you and I, as Christian men and church members, ready to do our part in city politics and lend our personal aid to the good men of our cities who are trying to nominate and elect good city attorneys and good school boards and good police commissioners and good political heads of our fire departments and honest men who will purge our municipalities of corruption? It is nonsense for ministers to sit back in their ecclesiastical chairs and say, "It is not our business to touch city politics." When a moral issue is at stake it is the business of the churches and the business of all church members to go to the primaries and help nominate the men who ought to be nominated and help elect those honest men after they have been placed in nomination. If the members of the churches would only stand side by side at the ballot box and in the primaries, the Tammany saloon keepers of the places of evil resort stand side by side, the day would not be far distant when all cities would be redeemed and purged of political corruption, even as our United States court rooms and our national legislative halls have ceased to be a stench in the nostrils of all decent people.

Thank God, I believe civic purification is not far distant. It is almost miraculous to catalogue the rapid changes which have come within the life of the present generation in the purification of our national life. Senator Quay of Penn died in 1906. A short time before he passed away he was asked this question, "Senator, is the tone politics at Washington growing better or worse?" He answered the question in these words: "When I came into public life in Washington in 1869 the corridors of the capitol were haunted by lobbyists who interested in all sorts of schemes for plundering the public treasury. There were quite a number of senators and representatives who were suspected by their associates of being venal. When I think of the confidence which prevailed then and for years following—Tweed intrenched in power in New York, five judges of the United States court fleeing from office under threats of impeachment for corruption, the Credit Mobilier scandal, the scandals attending the Austrian exposition, the lobbying, the whole civil service treated as patronage for powerful political leaders, the report of the committee of military affairs in the Nineties recommending the expulsion of four of its members for making sale of their privileges of selecting youths to be educated at the West Point military school, the impeachment for corruption of four judges in New York, the whisky frauds (in which the private secretary of the President was implicated), the Belknap impeachment—a considerable number of the United States Senate saying to another when he declared he could find no stain to attach to Belknap, that if the Senate could find no steal in it it was not likely to be there, and the native Republican leaders in Massachusetts detected in state prison offenses—it seems to me as if I were living not only in another age, but in another planet."

That was the testimony of the purification of national and state politics in the political life of Senator George F. Hoar of Massachusetts. May we live to see such a wonderful change in the purification of city politics. May we live to see our churches aroused politically. May our churches become great institutions of moral and political training. May their members side by side go forth to capture the political primaries and the city hall early and right. May godly men always not only be willing to serve their fellowmen in civic offices as a matter of duty, but as a work of God, go forth to elect their fellows to positions of civic trust. Then, like Jerusalem of old, we will not only have six cities of refuge, but all our cities shall be cities of refuge, where purity and truth and honor shall love to dwell, and where Christ's altars shall be in the shrine at which municipal officials and inhabitants shall bow the knee and worship. May God bless and speed the consummation of our beloved cities' emancipation from sin.

The Judge and the Lawyer.

In an altercation between counsel and the judge the judge, after several attempts at conciliation, remarked, "Well, I have done all I can to promote peace, but the result reminds me very much of the fable of the old man and the ass."

The counsel, with visible irritation in his manner, wished to know which of those entities applied to him "Neither in particular," was the reply; "but, considering our respective ages, you cannot object to my saying that I am the old man."

Insurance of Infants.

Mr. Rider Haggard, speaking at Lowestoft on infant mortality, said he had never seen among savages such a vein of cruelty as existed in civilized humanity. The infantile death rate could be greatly reduced. Receiving money on the death of babies from insurance companies was a form of cruelty that I am the old man."

Gigantic Bible Classes.

Bishop Thornton, vicar of Blackburn, has appointed the Rev. F. Askew a senior curate, and to take charge of the famous adult Bible classes, connected with that church. The classes comprise 800 enrolled male members and 780 women.

He Would Do.

"Have you had any experience as chauffeur?"

"Well, I can show you the receipts for the fines I have paid."

ALMOST HOPELESS.

THE CONDITION OF THOUSANDS OF PALE, ANÆMIC GIRLS.

"Almost hopeless is the best way to describe the condition I was in about a year ago," says Miss Mamie Mannett, of Athol, Ont. "I had a bad cough, and began losing my way until I reached a condition when I feared I was sinking into chronic invalidism. I was as white as a sheet, my blood apparently having turned to water. I had no appetite, suffered from headaches and dizziness, and my exertion would leave me breathless, and it appeared that I was going into a decline. The use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills highly recommended by the newspapers, and I decided to give them a trial. It was a wise decision for me when I came to this decision, as the pills have not only restored my health, but have actually made me stronger than I ever was before. I now have a good appetite, a good color, and sew and knit and I am satisfied that I owe all this to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which I cheerfully recommend to other pale, feeble, sickly girls."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills quickly cured Miss Mannett, simply because they made new, rich blood—blood which enables the system to throw off disease, and brings roses to the cheeks in place of pale sickly sufferers. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure blood diseases—just as surely as good cures headache, and the new blood which the pills make braces the nerves and tones and strengthens every organ and every part of the body. That is why these pills strike straight at the root of such common diseases as headache, dizziness and backaches, kidney trouble, indigestion, neuralgia, rheumatism, St. Vitus dance, paralysis, and the secret ailments which enervate young girls suffer in silence. It has been proved in thousands of cases that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best and only medicines have failed But you must get the genuine pills which bear the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around each box. All medicine dealers sell these pills or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

In buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and patronize your home mill, thereby producing Brand and Experience that you can purchase cheaper than the product of the Western mills, which are to be transported thousands of miles, at great expense and usually, when it reaches you, of inferior quality.

The grocer complains if the farmer or the merchant goes to Toronto or to outside points for an article he can get at his own door. Just as grocers, but he does not hesitate to buy flour from mills hundreds of miles away, and sell you an inferior flour for more money than you can purchase the home product for, every bag of which is guaranteed.

CANADA'S FIRST PARLIAMENT

Too few of the citizens of Canada's families are familiar with the story of our first Federal Parliament—days in which hope and doubt held sway in conflict. An eyewitness of these scenes tells, in July Canadian Magazine, of the famous duel between Tupper and Blake on the floor of the House, over the prospects of the new Confederation. When Tupper, a mere stripling, appeared in the House, Chamberlain (D.R.) fought against the great Nova Scotian leader, then in his prime, Mr. Howe remarked to a friend, "That boy will give us trouble yet." Years afterwards, they met on the floor of the Ottawa House in that famous duel, the record of which is immortal upon seventeen of the ragged pages of Hansard.

Mr. J. R. B. McCreedy, the 93-a-witness referred to, is contributing six of these reminiscent articles to the Canadian Magazine.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"Was a neighbor who had been ill when I called a while ago. How are they now, Miss Lowesmith?" "Quite well, I replied. "I've heard of grippe."

Signalmen—Marshals and Dandies are the best for the kidneys, powerful on the liver and kidneys, reckless, but can always be depended upon. Almost free of the excessive heat, belong to the organic group, but perform their functions. Marshals predominate, since most people of Parmentier, Vegetable, and seem to render them comfortable. Dandies are modified. There are few pills so effective and yet so mild.

"Yes, my dear, while we were alone he had the impudence to kiss me. I suppose you told him that you thought it hasty?"

"Indeed I didn't. Every time he did it I screamed."

Walk the Torpid Energies. Machinery not properly supervised and speeded up wont keep good time. Just watch it working. It is the same with a healthy organism. Impurities need them up, or time they are likely to clog the torpid and throw the whole machinery out of gear. Dr. Hamilton's Pills were made to meet such cases. Hamilton is the Pills' inventor's family name, and being into order and health of all who use them.

Lady Beauchamp told Lord Palmerston that Mead, who had been with her for a few days of sight, only to come back again, because the climate was too much for him.

"What am I to do with such a woman?" exclaimed Lord Palmerston. "I will better take her to the Lord Chancellor."

Pills For Off—Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is known in Australia, South Africa as well as in Canada and the United States, and its sales increase each year. It must make its own way, and all that Dr. Duff is to keep its name before the public. Everyone knows a bottle of it at any store, for it is always kept on hand.

I must have neither what she passed the other day in a wheeled chair. "It was answered, absently, and a fellow feel no tough the next morning."

Pickle but Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator because it is a safe and sure medicine for their children and a powerful expeller of worms.

Rube Jackson—Huh! Yer muddar is a fine woman.

Reginald Tinkham — "Cose she is. She wouldn't trade it for all yer fadder hasn't got 'round it."

Those who feel some of Holloway's Pills Cure. I was severely cured of my sores by this remedy and I wish to recommend it to my friends. So do Mr. J. W. Brown, Chicago.

When a fellow gets full and goes fishing that way, he don't have to bother about the manner of thing will he be?

Worry, too, good at guessing, but here we have it. During the Cold was out of the state his wife had obtained a divorce and re-married.

Dr. Calmette, Chief of the Tuberculosis Hospital at Lyons, in a communication to the Paris Academy of Medicine, makes announcement that the time is close at hand when children will be made immune to tuberculosis just as they are vaccinated against smallpox now. A few dead bacilli in cow's milk will be swallowed by the child and the thing will be done. Dr. Calmette claims that when his discovery is perfected the disease treated in this manner will give next to hopeless cases of tubercular sores without the slightest danger.

OLD CHRONIC SORES.

As a dressing for old chronic sores there is nothing like Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. While it is not advisable to heal old sores internally, they should be kept in a good condition, for which this old remedy is invaluable. For sore nipples Chamberlain's Salve has no equal. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 27d

Mr. Gotsum—Marie, how long has that young Smoothley been coming to see Nelle?

Mrs. Gotsum—Let me see. You remember when the papers published that story about your throwing solid a gold mine for him a million? Well, as nearly as I recall it, that's the time when he began coming."

An Ohio girl coughed up a needle the other night, since which time she vows that she hasn't felt a single stitch on her side.

He then turned the revolver on himself, inflicting a probably fatal wound. Jealousy of Mrs. Koch was out of the state his wife had obtained a divorce and re-married.

THE BRETHREN

Saladin stroked his beard and considered them, while Hassan smiled a little.

"Then, knights," he said presently, "tell me, which of you three loves best?"

"That, sire, is known to her alone. When the time comes, she will say, and not before."

"I perceive," said Saladin, "that behind this riddle hides a story. If it is your good pleasure, be seated, and set it out to me."

So they sat down on the divan and obeyed, keeping nothing back from the beginning to the end, nor, although the tale was long, did the Sultan weary of listening.

"A great story, truly," he said, when at length they had finished, "and one in which I seem to see the hand of Allah. Sir Knights, you will think that I have wronged you—ay, and your uncle, Sir Andrew, who was once my friend, although an older man than I, and who, by stealing away my sister, laid the foundations of this house of love and war and woe, and perchance of happiness unforeseen.

"Now listen. The lie that those two Frankish knaves, the priest and the false knight Lousin, told to you was true. As I wrote to your uncle in my letter, I dreamed a dream. Thrice I dreamed it; that this niece of mine lived, and that if I could bring her here to dwell at my side she should save the shedding of one drop of blood by some noble deed of hers—ay, of the blood of tens of thousands; and in that dream I saw her face. Therefore I stretched out my arm and took her from far away, and I say that the dream —yes, through you—she has been snatched from the power of the great Assassin, and is safe in my court, and therefore henceforth I am your friend."

"Sire, have you seen her?" asked Godwin.

"Knights, I have seen her, and the face is the face of my dreams, and therefore I know full surely that in those three and God grant, Sirs, Sir Godwin and Sir Wulf," Saladin went on in a changed voice, a stern, commanding voice, "Ask of me what you will, and, Franks though you are, I shall be given you for your service's sake wealth, lands, titles, all that men desire and I can grant—but ask not of me my niece, Rose of the World, princess of Baalbec, whom Allah has brought to me for His own purposes. Know, moreover, that if you strive to steal her hence, I will be certainly die; and that if she escapes from me and I recapture her, then she shall die. These things I have told her already, and I swear them in the name of Allah. Here she is, and in my house she must abide until the vision be fulfilled."

Now in their dismay the brethren looked at each other, for they seemed further from their desire than they had been even in the castle of Sinan. Then a light broke upon the face of Godwin, and he stood up and answered:

"Dread lord of all the East, we hear you and we know our risk. You have given us your friendship; we accept it, and are thankful, and that is enough. Sire, you say, has brought our lady Rose to you for His own purposes, of which you have no doubt since her face is the very face of your dreams. Then let His purposes be accomplished according to His will, which may be in some way that we cannot guess. We abide His judgment since that everything points to a splendid wheat harvest.

SECRET IS OUT

FORMULA OF MI-O-NA MADE PUBLIC, A CURE FOR STOMACH TROUBLES.

Our leading druggists are very anxious to have M-o-na, a remedy which they sell as a cure for stomach troubles, tested rigidly in every case of heart-burn, acute dyspepsia, wind on the stomach, loss of appetite, consuming dreams, sleeplessness, general weakness and debility, or where the digestive organs do not do as they should.

M-o-na is composed of bismuth subnitrate, by all odds the very best medicine known for treating digestives. It combines with the free sulphic compounds in the bowels forming a black substance which is passed off from the body without harm. It also has a soothing effect upon the nerve endings in the stomach.

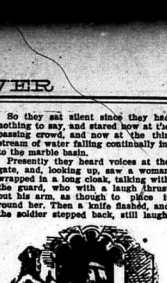
With this is combined cerium oxalate, a standard remedy in the treatment of all irritations of the stomach and digestive organs.

Sodium bicarbonate is then added to overcome the excessive acidity usually present in stomach troubles, and nux vomica for its general tonic and nerve-strengthening powers.

This combination of reliable remedies makes M-o-na a positive cure for all stomach troubles. And, perhaps the only one that can be said to have a guarantee that it cures nearly always it cures.

Large box of M-o-na tablets is sold for 50 cents.

If you cannot obtain M-o-na of your druggists, it will be sent by mail on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case. Book telling stomach troubles which will be sent free. The A. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N.Y.



Then a knife flashed and the soldier stepped back.

Wulf prayed Saladin that they might be allowed to speak with her from time to time, but he only answered shortly:

"Sir Knights, our customs are our customs. Moreover, the less you see of the princess of Baalbec the better. I think it will be for her, for you, whose blood I do not wish to have upon my hands, and for myself, who await the fulfilment of that dream which the angel brought."

Then the brethren left his presence sore at heart, for although they saw her from time to time at feasts and festivals, Rosamund was as far apart from them as though she sat in Steeple Hall—ay, and further. Also they came to see that of rescuing her from Damascus there was no hope at all. She dwelt in her own palace, whence the walls were guarded night and day by a company of the Sultan's Mameluks, who knew that they were answerable for her with their lives. Within its walls, again, lived trusted eunuchs, under the command of the cunning fellow named Mesrour, and her retinue of women, all of them spies and watchful. How could two men hope to snatch her from the heart of such a host and in spite her out of Damascus and through its encircling armies?

One comfort, however, was left to them. When she reached the court Rosamund had prayed of the Sultan that Masouda should not be separated from her, and this, because of the part she had played in his niece's rescue from the power of Sinan, he had granted, though doubtfully. Masouda, meanwhile, being a person of no account except for her beauty, and a heretic, was allowed to go where she wished to speak with whom she wished. So, as she wished to speak often with Godwin, they did not lack for tidings of Rosamund.

From her they learned that in a fashion the princess was happy enough —who would not be that had just escaped from Al-je-bal?—yet weary of the strange Eastern life, at new customs upon her, and of her aimless days; vexed also that she might not mix with the brethren. Day by day she sent her greetings, and with them warnings to attempt nothing—not even to see her—since there was no hope that they would succeed. So much afraid of them was the Sultan, Rosamund said, that both she and they were watched day and night, and of any folly their lives would pay the price. When they heard all this the brethren began to despair, and their spirits sank so low that the cared not what should happen to them.

Then it was that a chance came to them of which the issue was to make them still more admired by Saladin and to lift Masouda to honor. One fine morning they were seated in the courtyard of their house beside the fountain, staring at the passers-by through the bars of the bronze gate and at the sentries who marched to and fro before them. This house was in one of the principal thoroughfares of Damascus, and in front of it flowed continually an unending, many-colored stream of folk.

There were white-robed Arabs of the desert, mounted on their grumbling camels; caravans of merchants from Egypt or elsewhere; asses laden with firewood or the grey, prickly growth of the wild thyme for the bakers' ovens; water-sellers with their metallic bags and chinking brazen cups; vendors of birds or sweetmeats; women going to the bath in closed and curtained litters, attended by the eunuchs of their households; great lords riding on their Arab horses and preceded by their runners, at whom the crowd sounder and beat the poor with rods; beggars, halt, maimed, and blind, besieging them for alms, from whom all shrank away, who wished only for cross about quickly; companies of soldiers, some mounted and some afoot; holy men, who gave blessings and received alms; and so forth, without number and without end.

Godwin and Wulf, seated in the midst of the garden, watched them all them gloomily. They were weary of this ever-changing panorama, weary of the unusual glare and glitter of the unfamiliar life, weary of the insistent cries of the muezins on the minarets, of the flash of the swords that they soon seen be red with the blood of their own people; weary, too, of the hopeless task to which they were set. Rosamund was one of this multitude; she was the prisoner of Saladin, held as Eastern by her blood, and, coming more Eastern day by day—or so they thought in bitterness—before very long she would be the princess of Baalbec out of the power of a monarch more absolute than the king of England.

Then with a hiss of disappointment rage the fedai drew back at the gate.

"A D'Arcy! A D'Arcy! Help for the Saints!" shouted the brethren, and the fray began.

Six of the men attacked them, and while they were engaged with these the other two slipped round and tried the door, only to find it fast. Then they returned to their brethren, thinking to take the key from off their bodies. At the first rush two of the fedai fell, cut down by the sweep of the long swords, but after that the murderers would not come close, and while some were engaged with them first, others strove to pass and stab them from behind. Indeed, a blow from one of their long knives fell upon Godwin's shoulder, but the good mail turned it.

"Give way," he cried to Wulf, "or they will beat us."

So suddenly they gave way before them till their backs were against the door, and there they stood, shouting for help and sweeping round them with their swords into reach of which the fedai dare not come. Now from without the clamor rose in a cry and tumult, and the sound of heavy blows falling upon the gates that the murderers had barred behind them, while upon the further side of the door, which he could not open, was heard the voice of the Sultan demanding to know what passed.

The fedai heard these sounds also, and read in them their doom. Forgetting caution in their despair and rage, they buried themselves upon the brethren, for they thought that if they could get them down they might still break through the door and slay Salah-ed-din before they themselves were slain. But the brethren stepped back behind their rush with point and buckler, wounding two of them sorely; and when at length they closed in upon them, the gates were burst, and Hassan and the outer guard were at hand.

A minute later and, but little hurt, Godwin and Wulf were leaning on their swords, and the fedai, some of them dead or wounded and some of them captive, lay before them on the marble floor. Moreover, the door had been opened, and through it came the Sultan in his nightgear.

"What has chanced?" he asked, looking at them doubtfully.

"Only this lord," answered Godwin; "these men came to kill you and we held them off till help arrived."

"Kill me! My own guard kill me?"

"They are not your guard; they are fedai, disguised as your guard, and sent by Al-jebal as he promised."

Now Salah-ed-din turned pale, for he who feared nothing else was all his life afraid of the Assassin and their lord, who thrice had striven to murder him.

"Light the armour from those men," went on Godwin, "and I think that you will find truth in my words, or, if not, question such of them as still live."

TIRED OF THE CITY,

For The Beaver.

I am tired of the city,
Of its noise and its din,
I'll be right glad when vacation
For school workers shall begin.

And I say I'll pack our trusty,
Bid my friends a fond adieu,
Then I'll take "a little walk"
When street cars and autos cease marching
Down "the little old New York."

How I pity all the people,
Who must through the summer days,
Still look upon the pale sunbeam,
In subjection to its rays.

Scholars alright, so is the city,
But I'll take "a little walk"
When street cars and autos cease marching
Down "the little old New York."

Mrs. Gotsum—Marie, how long has that young Smoothley been coming to see Nelle?

Mrs. Gotsum—Let me see. You remember when the papers published that story about your throwing solid a gold mine for him a million? Well, as nearly as I recall it, that's the time when he began coming."

FIRE AT TWEED.

Tweed, July 2.—The B. of Q. Ry. engine shed here was totally destroyed by fire which broke out about three oclock this morning. DOMINION DAY.

Monday last proved a great disappointment to all in this section who wished to celebrate the day here. All forenoon the weather was fine, and our streets were crowded with visitors from all sections of this district, but shortly after noon it commenced to rain, and with such violence that the race track was spoiled, and the races and other attractions at the Driving Park were called off. This proved a great disappointment as the entries were will filled with first-class horses, and an excellent afternoon's sport was promised to the large crowd that came especially to witness our annual races. Being confined to the streets and hotels, there was more drinking than usual. We understand the races have been postponed until Monday, 3d Sept., Labor Day.

Women

Here is Good Proof that Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Make Healthy Women.

Here is a testimonial, wholly unsolicited, which proves that Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women will make healthy women even after physicians and other remedies have failed.

Mrs. McDonald consents to its publication.

B. N. Robinson & Co., Coaticook.

Gentlemen,—I can testify to the truth of the statement concerning Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women, "They make healthy women."

I was in a run-down condition, felt tired, irritable and all out of sorts. Was just able to drag myself about from day to day. I had not much faith in the efficacy of ordinary remedies to help women, for I had tried them. I went therefore to a leading physician of Montreal. He evidently did not know what I specially needed, for his medicine did me little good. I then went to another physician. He gave me a liquid prescription, which made me feel better while I was taking it, but worse when I stopped. Then a friend, who had proved their worth, recommended Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets. I tried them and found they contained just what a run-down woman needs. Again your statement proved true. Improvement was noticed the first week. They increased my appetite and helped digestion. I forgot that I had any nerves. I began to sleep well nights and got up in the morning with the tired feeling gone and ready for the day's duties. In fact, they did for me just what you claim they will do for women in your advertisements, and best of all I continued feeling well after I stopped taking the tablets.

MRS. D. McDONALD,
12 Outremont Terrace,
Annex, Montreal.

These tablets will do for any rundown woman just what they did for Mrs. McDonald.

They are doing it for women every day.

Just buy one box and watch the improvement in one week.

CONSECRATION OF ST. PAUL'S, ALDEN.

By His Lordship The Bishop of Ontario.

Rev. Dr. Mills, Bishop of Ontario, paid his annual visit to the English Church at Alden on Wednesday afternoon, the occasion being peculiarly important, as the edifice was then consecrated to Communion by laying on of hands, Mr. H. Hall and Mr. Bailey being appointed Lay Reader of the Mission by the Bishop, and Communion administered to fifty-seven members, and the Church crowded.

Miss Flossie Bartrim, organist of Parham, played very throughout the ceremony, and Mr. T. H. Hu?s place at the piano, being admitted as Lay Reader. The service of Consecration is one that deserves to secure, and merits a fuller description. The clergy joined in the procession at the porch.

The Bishop in the doorway, and was received by the Rev. Canon Kerry man, Rom T. J. O'C. Fenlon, the lay reader, the two wardens, Messrs. James and Minor Williams, and Mr. G. Gray, ex-Warden, a large number of people. Mr. James Williams, read in clear tones the petition for Consecration, to which the Bishop assented and prayed for a divine blessing on the proceedings performed. The Wardens and Lay Readers, Messrs. Hall and Bailey, and finally the Bishop, attended by his Chaplain, Rev. Canon Bedford Jones, Psalm. On reaching the altar the Bishop turned to the people and referred to the universal and ancient custom of consecrating Places to God's service. Next turning to the Altar while all knelt, he offered prayer for every possible future use of the new church, Baptism, Confirmation, Holy Communion, Marriage, Thanksgiving, Burial, the souvenirs and the end, finally prayer and preaching. Then seated on his chair, the Bishop ordered the sentence of Consecration to be read aloud, while the Dedication hymn was sung.

The Bishop referred to the church as being "perfect in details and was highly pleased with the building."

The sermon made a deep impression not only upon the congregation but on the friends who were present. The Bishop came from the other stations of the Mission, where he had confirmed candidates, and speaks very highly of Arden, to hold service in the new church at the time.

The visiting clergy present were Rural Dean Pollard, Napanee; Rural Dean Young, Madoc; Revds. Ashley, Sydenham; Clark, Darcy; Lake; Irvine, Picton; O'Connor Fenlon, minister in charge. The occasion was one that will be long remembered.

FORMER NAPANEEAN

Mr. James A. Hosey, the Courier-Citizen's day Associated Press operator, was one of those entered in the big international telegraphers' tournament at Buffalo, N.Y., "code" form on Friday night, and met with conspicuous success. Several hands of 100 words were submitted. In the test for receiving messages by ear, Mr. Hosey stood fifth out of a large field of competitors from this and other countries, while in the receiving of a single code he took his standing and was equally high if not higher. The receiving was on the general accuracy and correctness of the type-written "copy" produced, as well as the speed of receiving without breaks. To have won an excellent standing in such a competition with the expert operators of the several nations is very creditable credit to Mr. Hosey and a source of pride to ours.—Lowell Courier-Citizen.

While you have been at Centreville you have endeared yourself to the pupil classes of the community, by your kind and sympathetic manner and by your efforts to help us every good cause. We ask you to accept this purse and toilet and manicure set in remembrance of the pupils of Centreville Public School.

Signed on behalf of the school.

Ethel Hepburn,
Lillian Fleming,

In reply Miss Wilson thanked the children for the kindly feelings they had entertained towards her. Although she felt sorry to part with the usual affection and appreciation had sometimes occurred, still at all times she had found them affectionate and kind child ren. It was with feelings of regret that she found it necessary to leave them, but that she wished them all success, not only in the coming exams, but throughout their future life.

The BRETHREN

By Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," Etc.

Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

They obeyed, and there upon the breast of one of them, burnt into his skin, was the symbol of the blood-red dagger. Now Saladin saw, and beckoned the brethren aside.

"How knew you of this?" he asked, searching them with his piercing eyes.

Masouda, the lady Rosamund's waiting woman, answered: "Our lord, and we, were to be murdered tonight by eight men, so we made ready."

"Why, then, did you not tell me?"

"Because," answered Wulf, "we were not sure that the news was true, and did not wish to bring false tidings and be made foolish. Because, also, this brother and I thought that we could hold our own awhile against eight of Sinan's rats disguised as soldiers of Saladin."

"You have done it well, though yours was a mad counsel," answered the Sultan. "Then he gave his hand first to one and next to the other, and said, simply:

"Sir Knights, Salah-ed-din owes his life to you. Should it ever come about that you owe your lives to Salah-ed-din, he will remember this."

Thus this business ended. On the morrow those of the fedai who remained alive were questioned, and confessing freely that they had been sent to murder Saladin who, they said, robbed their master of his bride, the two Franks who had carried her off, and the wicked Masouda, whom they guided them, they were put to death cruelly enough. Also many others in the city were seized on suspicion or suspicion, so that for a while there was no more fear from the Assassins.

Now from that day forward Saladin held the brethren in high friendship, and pressed gifts upon them and offered them honors. But they refused them all, saying that Godwin owed but one thing of him, and he knew what it was—an answer at which his face fell.

One morning he sent for them, and, except for the presence of prince Hassan, the most favorite of his emirs, and a famous imaun, or priest of his religion, received them alone.

"Listen," he said briefly, addressing Godwin. "I understand that my niece, the princess of Baalbec, is beloved by you. Good. Subscribe the Koran, and I give her to you in marriage, for thus also she may be led to the true faith whom I have sworn not to force therefore, and I gain a great warrior and Paradise a brave saint. Or, if the imaun here will instruct you in th truth."

Then he spoke, but Godwin only stared at him with eyes set wide in wonderment, and answered:

"Sire, I thank you, but I cannot change my faith to win a woman, however dearly-I may love her."

"So I thought," said Saladin with a sigh, "though indeed it is sad that superstition should thus blind so brave and good a man. Well, it is not your turn. What say you to my offer?"

Will you take the princess and her dominions with three thousand gold as a marriage portion?"

Wulf thought a moment, and as he thought there arose in his mind a vision of an autumn afternoon that seemed years and years ago, when you and Rosamund had stood by the shrine of St. Chad on the shores of Essex, and jested of this very matter of a change of faith. Then he answered, with one of his great laughs:

"Ay, sire, but on my own terms, not on yours, for if I took these I think that my marriage would lack blessings. Nor, indeed, would the Rosamund wish to wed a servant of your Prophet, who if it pleased him might take other wives."

Saladin leant his head upon his hand, and looked at them with disappointed eyes yet not unkindly.

"The Knight Lozelle was a Crosworshipper," he said, "but you two are very different from the knight Lozelle, who accepted the Faith when it was offered to him."

"To win your 'trade,' said Godwin, bitterly.

"I know not," answered Saladin, "though it is true the man seems to have been a Christian among the Franks, and here was a follower of the Prophet. At least, he is dead at your hands, and though he sinned against me in taking my niece to Sinan, peace be with his soul. Now I have one thing more to say to you. That Frank, Prince Amaut or Karak, whom you call Reginald de Chatillon—accursed be his name!—" and he spat upon the floor, "has once more broken the peace between me and the king of Jerusalem, slaughtering my merchants and stealing their goods. I will suffer this shame no more, and very shortly I unfurl my standards, which shall not be folded up again until they float upon the mosque of Omar and from every tower top in Palestine. Your people are disbanded. I, Yusuf Salah-ed-din," and he rose as he said the words, his very beard bristling with wrath, "declare the Holy War, and will sweep them to the sea. Knows now, you brethren, for you fight for me or against me? Or will you give up your swords and bide here in my prisoners?"

"We are the servants of the Cross," answered Godwin, "and cannot lift steel against it, and thereby lose our souls." Then he spoke with Wulf, and added, "As to your second question, whether we should bide here in chains. It is one that our lady Rosamund must answer, for we are sworn to her service. We demand to see the princess of Baalbec."

"Send for her, Emir," said Saladin to the prince Hassan, who bowed and departed.

A while later Rosamund came, looking beautiful but, as they saw when she threw back her veil, very wild and weary. She bowed to Saladin, and the brethren, who were not allowed to touch her hand, bowed to her, devouring her face with eager eyes.

"Greeting, my uncle," she said to the Sultan, "and to you, my cousins, greeting also. What is your pleasure with me?"

Saladin motioned to her to be seated and bade Godwin set out the case, which he did very clearly, ending:

"Is it your wish, Rosamund, that we stay in this court as prisoners, or go forth to fight with the Franks in the great war that is to be?"

Rosamund looked at them awhile, then answered:

"To whom were you sworn the first? Was it to the service of our Lord, or to the service of a woman?" Then she looked.

Such words as we expected from you, being what you are," exclaimed Godwin, while Wulf nodded his head in assent, and added:

"Sultan, we ask your safe conduct to Jerusalem, and leave this lady in your charge, relying on your plighted word to do no violence to her faith and to protect her person."

"My safe-conduct you have," replied Saladin, "and my friendship also. Nor, indeed, should I have thought well with of you had you deemed either of you had you decided otherwise. Now henceforth we are enemies in the eyes of all men, and I shall strive to slay you as you will strive to slay me. But as regards this lady, have no fear. What I have promised shall be fulfilled. Bid her farewell, whom you will see no more in fight."

"Why, then, did you not tell me?"

"Because," answered Wulf, "we were not sure that the news was true, and did not wish to bring false tidings and be made foolish. Because, also, this brother and I thought that we could hold our own awhile against eight of Sinan's rats disguised as soldiers of Saladin."

"You have done it well, though yours was a mad counsel," answered the Sultan. Then he gave his hand first to one and next to the other, and said, simply:

SAVED HIS COMRADE'S LIFE.

"While returning from the Grand Army encampment at Washington City, a comrade from Eagle, Ill., was taken with cholera morbus and was in terrible misery," writes Mr. J. Hoagland, of Edson, Iowa. "I gave him Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and believe saved his life. I have from personal experience in immigration work and conducted many parties in the south and west. meet, for she knew well that even if the war went in favor of the Christians or of the Moslems, there must be some place where they would never find her. She knew well also that from Damascus her rescue was impossible, and thus although Saladin loved them, as he loved all who were honest and brave, he would receive them no more as friends, for fear lest they should rob him of her, whom he hoped in some way unforeseen would enable him to end his days in peace. Moreover, the struggle between Cross and Crescent would be fierce and to the death, and she was sure that where was the greatest fighting there in the midst of it would be found Godwin and Wulf. Well might it chance, therefore, that her eyes had looked their last upon them.

Oh! she was great, Gold was here, with gems more than she could count, and few were the weeks that did not bring her added wealth or gifts. She had palaces to dwell in—alone; garden to wander in—alone; eunuchs and slaves to rule over—alone. But never a friend had she, save the woman of the Assassins, to whom she clung because she, Masouda, had saved her from Sinan, and who clung to her, why, Rosamund could not be sure, for there was a veil between their spirits.

They were gone—they were gone! Even the sound of their horses' hoofs had died away, and she was desolate as a child lost in a city full of folk. Oh! and her heart was filled with fears for them, and most of all for one of them. If he should not come back into it, what would her life be? Rosamund bowed her head and wept; then, hearing a sound behind her, turned to see that Masouda was weeping also.

"Why do you weep?" she asked.

"The maid should copy her mistress," answered Masouda with a hard laugh; "but, lady, why do you weep? At least you are beloved, and, come what may, nothing can take that from you. You are not of less value than fine gold to Godwin, a knight's ransom, or the faithful hound that runs at his side."

A thought rose in Rosamund's mind—a new and terrible thought. The eyes of the two women met, and those of Rosamund asked, "Which?" anxiously as once in the moonlight she had asked it with her heart between the gate above the Narrow Way. Between them stood a table inlaid with ivory and pearl, whereon the dust from the street had gathered through the open lattice. Masouda leaned over, and with her forefinger wrote a name in the letter in the dust upon the table, then passed her hand across it.

Rosamund's face heaved twice or thrice and was still. Then she asked, "Why did not you who are free go with him?"

"Because he prayed me to bide here and watch over you, whom he loved. So to the death—I watch."

Slowly Masouda spoke, and the heavy words seemed to sound dropping from a death wound. Then she sank forward into the arms of Rosamund.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Many a day had gone by since the brethren bade farewell to Rosamund at Damascus. Now, one burning July night, they sat upon their horses, the moonlight gleaming on their mail. Still as statues they sat, looking out from a rocky mountain top across that gray and wild plain that stretches from near Nazareth to the lip of the hills at whose foot lies Tiberias on the shore of Galilee. Beneath them camped around the fountain of Sepforieh, were spread the hosts of the Franks to which they did sentinel: thirteen hundred knights, twenty thousand foot, and hordes of Turcopoles—that is, natives of the country, armed after the fashion of the Saracens.

Two miles away to the southeast, glimmered the white houses of Nazareth, set in the lap of the mountains of Nazareth, the holy city, where for thirty years lived and toiled the Saviour of the world. Doubtless, thought Godwin, His feet had often trod that mountain whereon they stood, and in the watered vales below His hands had spread the plow or reaped the corn. Long, long had His voice been silent, yet to Godwin's ears it still seemed to speak in the murmur of the vast camp, and to echo from the slopes of the Galilean hills, and the words it said were: "I bring not peace, but a sword."

To-morrow they were to advance, a rumor said, across the desert plain and give battle to Saladin, who lay with all his power by Hattin, above Tiberias. Godwin and his brother thought that it was a madness; for they had seen the might of the Saracens and hidden armies that dotted plain beneath the summer sun. But who were they, two wandering, unattached knights, that dare counsel them to lift up their voices against those of the lords of the land, skilled from their birth in desert warfare? Yet Godwin's heart was troubled and fear took hold of him, not for himself, but for all the countless army that lay asleep yonder, and for the cause of Christendom, which staked its last throw upon this battle.

"I go to watch yonder; bide you here," he said to Wulf, and, turning the head of Flame, rode some sixty yards over a shoulder of the rock to the further edge of the mountain which looked towards the north. Here he could see neither the camp, nor Wulf, nor any living thing, but indeed was utterly alone. Dismounting, and bidding the horse stand, which it would do like a dog, he walked forward a few steps to where there was a rock, and, kneeling down, began to pray with all the strength of his pure, warrior heart.

"Father," he prayed, "Who once wast man and a dweller in these mountains, and knowest what is in man, have pity on Thine army for all the thousands who sleep round Nazareth; not for myself, who care nothing for life, but for all those, Thy servants and my brethren. Yes, and for the cross upon which Thou didst hang, and for the faith itself throughout the East. Oh! give me light! Oh! let me hear, and see, that I may warn them, unless my fears are vain!"

So he murmured to Heaven above and beat his hands against his brow, praying, ever praying, as he had never prayed before, that wisdom and vision might be given to his soul.

It seemed to Godwin that a sleep fell on him—at least his mind grew clouded and confused. Then it cleared again, slowly, as stirred water clears, till it was bright and still; yet another mind to that which was his servant day by day which never could see or hear those things he saw and heard in that strange hour. Lo! he heard the spirits pass, whispering as they went; whispering, and, as it seemed to him, weeping also for some great woe which was to be; weeping yonder over Nazareth. Then like curtains the veils were lifted from his eyes, and as they swung aside he saw further, and yet further.

He saw the king of the Franks in his tent beneath, and about him the council of his captains, among them the fierce-eyed master of the Templars, and a man whom he had seen in Jerusalem where they had been dwelling, and knew for Count Raymond of Tripoli, the lord of Tiberias. They were reasoning together, till, presently, in a rage, the Master of the Templars drew his sword and dashed it down upon the table.

Another veil was lifted, and lo! he saw the camp of Saladin, the mighty, endless camp, with its ten thousand tents, amongst which the Sultan moved and to and fro, as the wind rustles through all the watches of the night. He saw the royal pavilion, and in it the Sultan walking to and fro alone—none of his emirs, not even his son, were with him. He saw, but in Godwin's mind was his thought.

It was: "Behind me the Jordan and the lake of Galilee, into which, if my flanks were turned, I should be driven, I and all my host. In front the territories of the Franks, where I have no friend; and by Nazareth their great army. Allah alone can help me. If they sit still and force me to attack across the desert and attack them before my army melts away, then I am lost. If they move upon me through the Mountain Tabor and by the watered land, I may be lost. But if—oh! if Allah should make them mad, and they should strike straight across the desert—then, then they are lost, and the reign of the Cross in Syria is forever at an end. I will wait here. I will wait here . . . ."

Look! near the pavilion of Saladin stood another tent, closely guarded, and in it on a cushioned bed lay two women. One was Rosamund, but she slept sound; and the other was Masouda, and she was waking, for her eyes met his in the darkness.

The last veil was withdrawn, and now Godwin saw a sight at which his soul shivered. A fire-blackened plain, above it a frowning mountain, and the mountain thick, thick with dead, thousands and thousands and thousands of dead, among which the hyenas wandered and the night-birds screamed. He could see their faces, and them he knew and loved as those of living men whom he had met in Jerusalem and elsewhere, or fought with while he lived. Yonder he hear also the moanings of the few who were yet alive.

Now the field—yes, and in the camp of Saladin, where lay more dead—his body seemed to wander searching for something, he knew not what, till it came to him that it was the corpse of Wulf over which he sought and found it. Ay—ay, nor his own either. Then once more he heard the spirits pass—a very great company, for to them were gathered all those dead—heard them pass away, sailing, ever more faintly wailing for the lost cause of Christ, wailing over Nazareth.

Godwin awoke from his dream trembling, mounted his horse, and rode back to Wulf. Beneath, as before, lay the sleeping camp, yonder stretched the brown desert, and there sat Wulf watching both.

"Tell me," asked Godwin, "how long is it since I left you?"

"Some few minutes—ten perhaps," answered his brother.

"A short while, to have seen so much," replied Godwin. Then Wulf looked at him curiously and asked:

"What have you seen, brother?"

"If I told you, Wulf, you would not believe."

"Tell me, and I will say."

So Godwin told him all, and at the end asked him, "What think you?"

Wulf considered awhile, and answered:

"Well, brother, you have touched no wine to-day, so you are not drunk, and you have done nothing foolish, so you are not mad. Therefore it would seem that the saints have been talking to you, or, at least, so I should think—for I am not one whom I have to be as good as you are. Yet it is folk like you that see visions, and these visions are not always true, for sometimes, I believe, the devil is their shrewdest. Our watch ended, for I hear the horses of the knights who come to relieve us. Listen; this is my counsel. In the tent yonder is our friend with whom we traveled from Jerusalem, Egbert, the bishop of Naza-reth, who marches with the host. Let us go to him and lay this matter before him, for he is a holy man and learned in all such mysteries."

Godwin nodded in assent, and presently, when the other knights arrived and they had made their report to them, rode off together to the tent of the bishop, leaving their horses in charge of a servant, entered.

Egbert was an Englishman who had left his native land in search of the holy life in the East, whereof the suns had tanned his wrinkled face to the hue of bronze, that seemed the more by contrast with his blue eyes and snow-white hair and beard. Entering the tent, they found him at his devotions before a little image of the Virgin, and knelt softly down, waiting till he had finished. Presently he rose, and greeting them with a blessing, asked them what they sought.

"Your counsel, holy father," answered Wulf. "Godwin, set out your case."

So, having seen that the tent flap was closed and that none lingered near, Godwin told him his dream.

The old man listened patiently, nor did he seem surprised at this strange story. Indeed, those days men saw or thought they saw—many such visions were accepted by the Church as true.

When he had finished Godwin added the dream he had seen in prison.

"Godwin D'Arcy," he answered, "in my youth I knew your father. It was I who baptized you, I who was the friend of his wounds, and a nobler soul never passed from earth to heaven. After you left Jerusalem I was glad to receive the guest of Saladin, we dwelt together for the same length of time, and together we traveled here, during all which time I learned to know you well. I would I could say that worthy sire—no dissolute knight, but a true servant of the Church. It will suffice you that to me one of my years is forbidden. Now, I am but a poor old man, and I have no power to help you foresight has been given, that through you those who rule us may be saved from the consequences of great sorrow and disgrace. Come; let us go to the king, and tell his sins and force me to hold council yonder."

So they went out together and rode across the royal tent. Here the bishop was admitted, leaving them without. Presently he came back and bade them enter, and as they passed, the guards whispered:

"A strange council, sirs, and a fateful!"

Already it was near midnight, but in the great tent which was crowded with barons and chief captains who sat in groups, or sat round a narrow table made of boards placed upon trestles. At the head of that table sat the king, Guy of Lusignan, a weakfaced man, clad in splendid armour. On his right was the white-haired Count Raymond of Tripoli, and on his left the black-bearded, frowning Master of the Templars, clad in his white mantle on the left breast of which the red cross was blazoned. Words had been running high, their faces showed it, but just then a silence reigned as though the disputants were weary, and the king leaned back in his chair, passing his hand to and fro across his face, while the bishop, and seeing the bishop, asked peevishly:

"What is it now? Oh! I remember, some dream that Godwin D'Arcy has had. Well, bring them forward and speak it out, for we have no time to lose."

So Godwin told his dream for the second time, and Egbert the bishop Egbert told of the vision that had come to him, and when he had done the barons seemed disposed to laugh, but when they looked at Godwin's high face and noted the bishop's grave and serene face, they ceased to laugh, and the place where the scroll of Pilate had been affixed above the holy head—almost seemed they seem to see that Form divine and dying.

"Now," broke in the voice of the Master of the Temple, "let Sir Godwin D'Arcy swear to the truth of his tale upon this Rood."

Rising from his knees Godwin advanced to the Cross, and laying his hand upon the wood, said:

"Before you, my Lord, I swear that not much more than an hour ago I saw a vision which has been told to the king's council, and that it is all; that I believe this vision was sent to me in answer to my prayer to preserve, not him and the holy city from the power of the Saracen, and that it is a true foreshowing of what will come about should we advance upon the Sultan. I can say no more. I swear, knowing that if I lie eternal damnation is my doom."

The bishop drew back the covering over the Cross, and in silence, the council took their seats again about the table. Now the king was very pale, and fearful; indeed a gloom lay upon all of them.

"It would seem," he said, "that here a messenger has been sent to us from heaven. Dare we disobey his message?"

The Grand Templar lifted his rugged, frowning face.

"A message from heaven, said you, king? To me he seems more like a messenger from Saladin. Tell us, Sir Godwin, were not you and your brother once the Sultan's guests at Damascus?"

"That is so, my lord Templar. We left before the war was declared."

"And you went on the Master, "as you tell officers of the Sultan's bodyguard?"

Now all looked intently at Godwin, who hesitated a little, forseeing how his answer would be read, whereon Wulf spoke in his loud voice:

"Ay, we acted as such for awhile, and—doubtless you have heard 'the story—saved Saladin's life when he was attacked by the Assassins."

"Oh!" said the Templar with bitter sarcasm, "you saved Saladin's life, did you? I can well believe it. You, being Christians, who above everything should desire the death of Saladin, saved his life! Now, Sir Knights, answer me one more question:

"Sir Templar, with my tongue or with my sword?" broke in Wulf, but the king held up his hand and bade him be silent.

"This is no tavern ruffling, young sir, and answer," went on the Templar. Or, rather, do you answer, Sir Godwin, is your cousin, Rosamund, the daughter of Sir Andrew D'Arcy, a niece of Saladin, and has she been created by him princess of Baalbec, and has she remained in his city at Damascus?"

"She is his niece," answered Godwin quietly; "she is the princess of Baalbec, but at this moment she is not in Damascus."

"How do you know that, Sir Godwin?"

"I know it because in the vision of which you have been told I saw her sleeping in a tent in the camp of Saladin."

Now the council began to laugh, but Godwin, with a set, white face, went on:

"Ay, my lord Templar, and near that very blazoned tent I saw another of the Templars and of the Hospitalers lying dead. Remember it when the dreadful hour comes and you see them also."

Now the laughter died away, and a murmur of fear ran round the board, mixed with such words as "Wizardry." "He has learnt it from the Assassins." "A black Sorcerer, without doubt."

Only the Templar, who feared neither man nor devil, laughed, and gave him the lie with his eyes.

"You do not believe me," said Godwin, "nor will you believe me when I say that while I was on guard on yonder hill-top I saw you wrangling with the Count of Tripoli—ay, and draw your sword and dash it down the form of him upon this very table."

Now again the council stared and muttered, for they too had seen this thing; but the Master answered:

"He may have learnt it otherwise than from an angel. Folk have been in and out of this tent. My lord king, have we more time to waste upon these visions of a knight of whom all we know for certain is, that like his brother, he has been in the service of Saladin, which they left, he says, in order to fight against him in this war. It may be so; it is not for us to judge. But I say that we have different I would inform against Sir Godwin D'Arcy as a sorcerer, and one who has been in traitorous communication with our common foe."

"And I would thrust the lie into your throat, were we not in a royal presence," shouted Wulf.

But Godwin only shrugged his shoulders and said nothing, and the Master went on, taking no heed.

"Sir Godwin, you have your word, and it must be spoken soon, for in four hours it will be dawn. Do we march against Saladin like bold Christian men, or do we bide here like cowards?"

"Then Count Raymond of Tripoli rose, and spoke:

"Before you answer, king, hear me, if it for the last time, who am old in years and know the Saracens. My land of Tiberias is sacked; my vassals have been put to the sword by thousands, my city is imprisoned in her citadel, and soon must yield. If she be not besieged, Yet I say it, and the barons here assembled, faster so than that you should advance across the desert to attack where the times differ. Thence also to its fate and my wife with it, and save your army, which is the last host of the Christians in the East. Christ has no more soldiers in these lands, Jerusalem has no other shield. The army of the Sultan is larger than yours; his cavalry are more skilled. Here is my hand—or, better still, bide here and await his attack, and victory will be to the soldiers of the Cross. Advance and the vision of that knight at whom you scoff will come true, and the cause of Christendom be lost in Syria. I have spoken, and for the last time."

"Like his friend the knight of Visions," muttered the Grand Master, "but count Raymond is an old ally of Sala-

FRUIT CROP REPORT.

Department of Agriculture.
Ottawa, June 30th, 1906.

Apples.

As was to be expected the reports for the month of June on apples are not quite so favorable. There are many reports of serious dropping, and the general appearance of the trees would place the crop at not more than medium. In forming an estimate of the crop the classification of apples into early, fall and winter has been kept in mind inasmuch as the three classes may not be equally affected alike.

In District 1 early apples are reported almost a full crop, the fall and winter apples a medium crop, Baldwins and Spies light. If, however, the season should prove a warm one the whole of the apples in District 1 will be cleaned up by apple buyers as early shipping stock.

In District 2 early apples are almost a full crop, the fall apples less and the winter only a medium crop.

In District 3 21 per cent. of the correspondents reported the crop light, 34 per cent. medium and 27 per cent. a full crop.

Reports from the Annapolis and Cornwallis Valleys, District 6, indicate a crop above medium but not quite a full crop. The Tent Caterpillar, the Bud Moth and Canker Worm have all been particularly severe as well are several minor pests in different parts of the valleys and it is not improbable that the Codling Moth will appear later. Wind storms and other contingencies will probably reduce the crop of winter apples to medium or crop of winter apples to medium or less. Summer and fall apples will be slightly above a medium crop. Gravenstein has set very heavily, and, where they are sprayed thoroughly will doubtless yield a large crop. Nova Scotia Kings and Ribstons have also set well. The Baldwins in Nova Scotia will be light.

The British Columbia crop of apples will be about the same as last year.

Pears.

The prospects for pears have deteriorated during the month. In Districts 1 and 2, producing the largest commercial crop, Keffers are reported a full crop with many failures, Clapp's Favorite, Anjou, Bosc and similar varieties, less than medium. This condition will also hold good for British Columbia.

Plums.

Plums are almost a failure, no large section reporting even a medium crop. The Aphis, which was so bad during 1905, is not the Japanese varieties are almost a total failure.

Peaches.

Correspondents report 17 per cent. of the crop of early peaches a failure, 17 per cent. light, 30 per cent. medium and 36 per cent. a full crop. Late peaches, 12 per cent. of the crop is a failure, 21 per cent. light, 24 per cent. medium and 24 per cent. a full crop. Early peaches will probably be sufficient to supply the demands of the market, but late peaches will probably be a shortage of good canning peaches.

Cherries.

Cherries are everywhere being marketed a large crop, of good quality and freerer from insects than usual.

Grapes.

Grapes are reported in good condition except in last year, with some complaints of winter-killing especially north of Lake Ontario.

Small Fruits.

The strawberry crop is maintaining the condition reported last month. The principal markets report fair receipts of good quality prices are 10 per cent. higher than last year.

The conditions for raspberries, black and red, is about the same as for strawberries.

Foreign Countries.

The Continental apple and pear crop is reported medium to good and the prospects for the English apple and plum and pear crop have fallen off seriously, and if this is confirmed by next month's report a much poorer condition will be materially changed for early and fall apples.

Shocking Accident.

At the noon hour yesterday little Miss Dora, daughter of Mr. Erastus Mordon, was riding on her wheel to Denison's store. When she arrived at the Salley crossing, she waited for a belated train to pass, and starting across the track she was struck by a light engine which was returning to its train from the water tank, and which Dora evidently had not noticed. She and her wheel were knocked about one hundred and fifty feet, and the child's head smashed to a jelly. The remains were taken to Paul & Ming's undertaking rooms. Coroner Dr. Cowan will hold an inquest.

Another account is that the child was knocked down and rolled over in front of the wheels for over two hundred yards. The back half of her head was cut off, and practically every bone in her body broken.

Centre st. crossing is a dangerous place, and this is not the first time an accident has occurred there. There are about a dozen tracks in all. G. T. R. and B. of Q.—and often crossing is dangerous, especially with spirited horses.

The sympathy of all goes out to Mr. and Mrs. Mordon and family, in the loss of the pride of their family.

THE MORNING BATH.

Conditions Under Which It Should Not Be Taken Cold.

Cold baths in the morning are undoubtedly beneficial, but only to those persons who have sufficient vital energy and nervous force to ensure good reaction with no subsequent languor or lassitude. Many persons who are greatly refreshed by their morning bath feel tired or languid two or three hours after it. When this occurs it is conclusive evidence that the practice is harmful. Persons who have an abundance of blood and flesh, who are sympathic or sluggish in temperament and whose nervous force is not depleted, can take a cold morning bath to advantage. Others who are inclined to be thin, whose hands and feet become cold and clammy on slight provocation, who digest food slowly and assimilate it with difficulty, who are nervous and who have much on their minds should avoid early morning cold baths. The shock of the bath before retiring at night is recommended, as it induces a healthy feet of brain and body till equalize conditions of circulation are established. Some persons who are weak in nerve force which is available reserves that they get at once a perfect reaction from the bath, and lose in after effects more than the value of the bath. Under rules of individuals should not bathe too often and should always be careful when choosing the time preferably before retiring.

A PROFESSOR TALKS AGAINST SURGERY.

Professor Ernst Schwenninger, leading physician of the Grand Ducal Hospital of Gross Lichterfelde, near Berlin, says that in his opinion, encouraged as it has been by operations performed nowadays, it is a surgical craze which has seized on the whole country. He remembered thereafter in its record with amusement. Cutting away the appendix and the vermiform appendix because nothing was known of their functions, an expedient so frequent in modern practice—for loose ends are the top note of professional frenzy. The professor ignores the existence of any special limitation in medical studies and does not think that the practitioner who studies the pathology of only a single organ can have a proper knowledge of the others which go to make up the human constitution. The basis for the man, "who devotes all his power of work, all his knowledge and experience to the treatment of only the eyes, nose, ears, skin, nerves or any other organs runs a risk of losing feeling, and hence the power to treat human beings. He ceases to be a physician and becomes a virtuoso."

WANTED—A SERVANT.

Good servants are much in demand in Washington as well as in other cities. Mrs. R. Brent Keyser is in search of an elderly coloured gentleman, servant, a colored cook, and a nurse girl, and she stopped any elderly colored woman who looked as if she might have been one of the aristocratic family servants, and therefore a reliable one, and made known her wants.

"I want a girl who is trusty and a good cook. I am willing to pay the most of our laundry work and to give her the wages, but I must have one able to engage one," said Mrs. K. "I don't know of any such girl now. I can get 7

"Indeed, no, lady, I don't," was the answer.

"Oh, dear," sighed Mrs. R., "what shall I do?"

"I dunno, fah whaw, lady, seein you does as I has to—hire a white woman." place where the final shot was fired.

ASSESS TOWN BY EXPERT.

Pictor Times.

A couple of citizens were discussing the unequal assessment of town properties. One was assessed too high, others too low. One suggested the assessment of the town by an expert, even though it cost $500 or more would be a great advantage to the town and assure fair assessment to the ratepayers. It is advocated that the publication of the assessment roll would ensure a fair assessment, would tend to create a feeling of security, and remove an idea that some ratepayers were being treated more leniently than others. The position of assessment officer is one of difficulty and the trouble is not always with him. He would be placed in a more comfortable relation with the people he serves if the particulars of his work were accessible in some tabular form in book or newspaper.

—The observant citizen may have noticed a change in the window sign of the Merchants Bank. The change, although only of one figure, represents $100,000 which they have this year added to their reserve fund, bringing it up to the respectable sum of $3,600,000. This huge sum is set aside for the express purpose of giving depositors security for their money, which speaks highly of the way this bank looks after the safety of its clients' money.

"WHOSE SON ART THOU"

HEREDITY AND ITS POTENT INFLUENCE IN MOLDING LIFE.

ANCESTORS AND CHARACTER

Rev. Dr. Talmage Points Out Only Way in Which an Evil Inheritance From One's Ancestors May Be Overcome—Advises That Young People Find Their Limitations Physically, Mentally, Morally and Spiritually.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Bruce, Toronto, in the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 8.—Heredity and its potent influence in molding life and character is discussed by the preacher, who points out the only way in which an evil inheritance from one's ancestors may be overcome. The text is I Samuel xvii, 58, "Whose son art thou, thou young man?"

If you were to ask the average American, "Would you like to live in Europe?" in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred he would answer, "No"—emphatically no. Europe is not the place for a poor man or for the son of a poor man, but only for the aristocrat. If a man has not had a father and a grandfather and a great-grandfather belonging to the nobility he has but little chance of social recognition. There the question which awakens scorn is not "Who are you?" or "What have you done?" or "What do you know?" but "Who was your father?" "Who was your mother?" People across the seas seem to think more about the cradle in which you were rocked as a baby than about the schools in which you have studied and the business house in which you have worked.

You say this absurdity of reverence for blood is never more demonstrated than in the unhappiness of some of our international marriages. Many of the poverty stricken families of Europe want the American dollars. Their pains are itching after the American gold. But even the dukes and the earls and the marquises woo America's fairest daughters and take them to their dingy ancestral halls the titled mothers-in-law and sisters-in-law and cousins-in-law patronize and slight the foreign interloper. Though their wedding robes may be made out of pearls and their dowries be as big as the open chest of a Monte Cristo, yet because their blood is not "blue" the old families will have as little as possible to do with the American bride.

Yes, it is absurd to worship at the graves of ancestors and so some of the titled families of Europe. When in January, 1750, the ancestral bones of the Hohenzerns were being moved into the new crypts of the great cathedral where they now sleep, Frederick the Great let him associate with the kind, and yet that animal will develop the mental characteristics of his father. In one remember of which, perhaps, he has ever seen since he was a few weeks old. Some one passed a remark was talking to a professor of one of the New England colleges. He said, "I do not believe all this stuff told about beavers being able to build dams." The professor said nothing at the time. A few weeks later he sent to the family a friend a little baby beaver, which he had bought from a hunter. This beaver became a favorite in the family. The beaver, if rightly domesticated, becomes as lovable as a little dog. All went quietly for a time. The baby beaver did not seem to have any desire to build a dam. But one day a leaky pail was put in the back yard. No sooner did the little animal see it than he ran out to the brook, waddled back a chip in his mouth and began to build a dam. The skeptical friend of the professor came in and saw the creature at work. He ordered the pail to be left just where it was and kept the animal at work. As the beaver began to leak out of the pail the little beaver continued to work at his dam. And that very afternoon, when the dam of the account was taken, within four weeks that little beaver, who had never seen another beaver work, had erected a solid dam all around that leaking pail.

So it is with the inherited abilities of the human mind. A child may be taken from his parents when young, yet that child's mind will to a certain extent be a reproduction of some ancestor's mind, whether he has ever seen them or heard of. This fact can be demonstrated in many ways.

We inherit our physical and mental tendencies, then, but we do more than that. We also inherit our capacities. As some people are born with a musical gift or an artist's gift or with weak legs or with weak eyes, so some people are born impulsive or lethargic or gruff or gentle or lazy or energetic or brave or cowardly. Our way of dealing with the brute or the child or the male much an ancestral heritage as the body and the mind themselves. Let me illustrate my thought by a very common incident of everyday life:

Here, for instance, is a child born in the purple of opportunities well developed. This child's father and mother and grandfathers and grandmothers were all gentlefolk. The male ancestors were not men of adventure. They were not fishermen, defying the storms of the sea for a scanty living. But these ancestors were quiet merchants of the city. What is the result? The country boy who comes to the city feels barefooted laughs at the city boy as a coward. By this time the latter has got in direct contrast to him and is afraid of nothing. The horses' hoofs and the barking dogs and the whistling snakes and the deadly tarantula's sting are more to him than so many harmless waves of floating gossamer. He is like the one case the child "both by birth and by education is a cautious child, while in the other by birth and by education is a venturesome child." Now, what are to be the great practical deductions? In the first place, I would charge you to have sympathy with those who are mentally as well as by environment in childhood had not to start in life. Do not be too harsh upon the wayward ones unless you find out that he was their father and she was their mother. If even with all the good physical and moral ancestral blood coursing in your veins you have had such a hard time to do right, how much harder must it be for that man to do right who was born wrong and whose early parental training has not been what it ought to have been? By the law of birth you have no right to judge all men alike. It is not fair or just or right. Why are we not ready to confess the difference of man from man in a moral and a spiritual and a physical sense?

In almost every family there are certain moral or spiritual delinquencies to be found in the ancestral records. We do not speak much about their shortcomings in public. The family skeletons are nearly always kept in the closet corners of the darkest closets. We not only shut the doors of these closets, but double lock them with two different locks. Then we plug up the keyholes lest some one might be able to look through and see the gray skulls. But the skeletons are there just the same. Perhaps your father was a drunkard or perhaps his weakness was in reference to money matters. If I should ask you, "How much of an estate did he leave?" you would answer, "Nothing." Aye, perhaps he left worse than nothing. Perhaps he did not pay his honest debts or perhaps he was harsh to his family. If you were to tell the truth you would not say, "My father died of pneumonia," but you would say, "My mother died of a broken heart." The family trouble was kept out, but your mother knew, and you knew, and all the children knew.

Now, my friends, I do not want you to publish your past family difficulties. But what I do want is for you never to forget the moral weaknesses of that ancestor. Just as you should guard your body against the tendency to consumption which you may have inherited from your mother you should guard against the special moral or the spiritual weakness which you may have inherited from your father or one of your grandparents. Brother, you cannot afford to trifle with that intoxicating glass. You cannot afford to do it any more than could Henry Wilson, who was once vice-president of the United States. For years he was one of the very few prominent officials in the city of Washington who would turn down his glass at the public banquets. One day some one asked him why he was so pronounced upon the temperance question, and he replied: "I was brought up in the home of a drunkard. In order to be free of the sight of a drunken father, as a little boy I ran away from home and changed my name. The blood of a drunken parent is in my veins, and I cannot afford to trifle with that which destroyed the manhood of that noble parent.

You, on the other hand, cannot afford to enter any speculative business. Your father may have lost a fortune, in Wall street. He may even have been a gambler with cards, but he was with stocks. You cannot afford to take any business position where you are likely. You have a noble Christian wife and three children. As long as you are in their surroundings you are all right. But beware of that moral delinquency of your ancestor. Better give up that membership at the club. You may have greater opportunity there to yield to that evil tendency. You know it. Better not. You are all right if by the help of God you turn and flee that danger as you would run from a mad dog. Be not afraid and hesitate. Do not let that evil temptation which overthrew that of your ancestors gain its fatal hand upon you, else you are gone. Run from that temptation. In God's name, run! run! run!

Nor do I wish to discourage you. These evil propensities, in your nature may be turned to useful purposes. The philosophers tell us that dirt is only matter in the wrong place. The qualities which cause you to do wrong may be used for your own good and the good of your country and the good of your race. Many of the greatest skill in the use of tools which the burglar employs in breaking into houses and picking locks might be used in an evil, but only a valuable power prostituted to evil purposes. With his powers he might be one of the most useful mechanics. So your evil propensities may be turned to your advantage and to that of society.

But shall I stop here? No. The Bible tells us that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children. But are not the virtues of the parents also transmitted. Then on account of the glorious Christian triumphs of your parents and grandparents and great-grandparents of this land, what delightful possibilities of Christian usefulness also within your own lives! By the many words of praise which you are continually using in speaking of your ancestors I know that you are possible to you also. What kind of a woman was your mother? "Ah," you answer, "my mother was a saint." I wish more had such a mother who ever lived. I cannot think of her ever doing anything of which you are ashamed. You think you have done that. We never had much money, but she always had enough to help the needy. Such was the best woman in our town. She was always hunting up some poor sick people and staying with them overnight. She never spoke in public except to pray. But, my, she could pray! Then my father. What a fine man he was. Why, he was so honest and fair and true that whenever he approached a dispute they would come to him and let him settle it for them. Ah, yes," you say, "that was a beautiful Christian home in which I was brought up! And as far as I can make out my grandparents on both my father's side were just like that and the same kind of Christian people as were their children." Is that so, my hearer? Then that so, my sister? Then I know the possibilities of mighty Christian usefulness are within you. You have splendid Christian possibilities. Will you not here and now surrender your life to Jesus Christ's service and beg him to make you like those Christian parents who gave you birth?

And as I am now pleading with you for Christian consecration, good ancestral tendencies I want to ask you a question, Have you, do you not at times feel a strange, intense longing come into your heart in the quiet of your home or in the morning and that longing seems to say: "Oh, why do I not give up this selfish life of sin? Why do I not become a gentle, pure, noble Christian character, as was my mother or my father or my grandmothers and my grandfathers?" Do you know what that longing was? It was the Christian blood of your ancestors pleading with you to lead the Christian life. Will you not obey that call and come and surrender your lives to the ancestral sense? Then see the great possibilities of Christian usefulness in you. By your family record I know it. When I ask the words of my text, "Whose son art thou?" will you hear and now answer, "I am the son of a Christian and by the help and pardon and mercy of my father's and mother's God I will be a Christian man?" Whose daughter art thou, young woman? Whose? Whose? Art thou a child of God?

MODEST CLAIMS OFTEN CARRY CONVICTION.

When Maxim, the famous gun inventor, placed his gun before a committee of experts, he stated it was carrying power to be much below what he felt sure the gun was capable of doing. The result of the trial was therefore a surprise to him, instead of disappointment. It is the same with the manufacturers of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, Veratina and Diarrhoea Remedy. They do not claim for it all that it at times will accomplish, but prefer to let the people find it out themselves. The more they do claim, is that it will positively cure Cholera, Cramps, Colic, all disorders of the stomach and bowels and has never been known to fail. For sale at The Big Mill Store. 27b

The Best Flour, Daisy Dale Nonesuch, Dafoe's Manitoba Patent

By numerous tests by the best bakers the above mentioned grades have been proven to be the best flours in the market.

When buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and patronize your home mill, thereby producing home industry. Remember we can purchase cheaper than the product of the Western mills, which has to be transported thousands of miles, at great expense and usually when it reaches you is of inferior quality.

The grocer complains if the farmer or the flour miller sends any of his wheat to outside points for an article he can get at his own door, and we do not blame him, but he does not hesitate to buy flour from outside points, but if he will try and sell you an inferior flour for your wheat instead of purchasing the home product for, very beg of you to have it guaranteed.

Choice corn meal and buckwheat flour always on hand. Chopping being a specialty, with the best feed mixer in the trade.

A full stock of the best Anthracite coal always on hand. Cash paid for the purchase of all kinds of grain.

Ask for prices at the Big Mill, before purchasing your Flour, Feed or Coal.

HON. W.S. FIELDING MINISTER OF FINANCE

It is not the price you pay for a furnace that makes it cheap or expensive, but the fuel it afterwards consumes.

A common furnace may cost you $5 or $10 less than a "Sunshine," but if it eats this up the first winter in extra fuel, what do you gain? Nothing, but all the annoyance and extra work that go with a poor furnace.

NAPANEEAN IN NEW YORK.

Says the New York Tribune: "If Edward O'Brien lives the credit will be due to Dr. Templeton, of the J. Hood Wright Memorial Hospital, who after the man was run over in the freight yards of the New York Central Railroad at 33rd st., crawled under the sender, hoisted up both legs, and after great exertion carried the man out and hurried him to the hospital, where both limbs were amputated immediately. O'Brien had lost much blood before Dr. Templeton reached him."

MATCHED RACE FOR $400.

A matched race for $200 a side has been made between Dr. Johnson's Harry Direct, of Peterboro', and Robert Coyle's Muriel Wilkes, of Colborne, to be trotted at the Napanee Driving Park, Wednesday, July 18th. The race is mile heats, best 3 in 5. As both horses are very fast and both owners are sure they can win, the race should be a very interesting one. A matinee race between local horses to "oggy" is also being arranged. This speaks well for Napanee track when horses will come from Peterboro' and Colborne to settle their disputes over a good track.

TO GLEN ISLAND AND PICTON.

CAMP LE NIL OPENS TO-MORROW.

Camp Le Nil will begin the celebration of its 20th anniversary on Saturday, the 14th inst. Two of the charter members, who first pitched their tents on Rattan's Point twenty years ago, will be present at the opening. These are Mr. C. I. T. Gould, of Baltimore, and Mr. W. B. Herrington, of Napanee. Mr. C. Fessenden, who became a member two years later, arrived in town on Thursday, with his son Vivian, the youngest member of camp. Mr. Melrose Gould, of Hamilton, and Prof. W. J. Budd, of Grimsell, Ohio, will also be present at the opening. The camp commenced with a modest membership of six in 1886, and now has sixty members upon its roll. In fact the applications for membership became so numerous that five tents had to be added to the list. It is expected that this year's attendance will be a record breaker. Fifteen are expected from the City of Baltimore alone.

MR. GOULD'S FALL.

Mr. Levi Gould, an aged resident of Tydendinaga, about two miles from Deseronto, while in Mr. W. H. Sanford's store on Thursday morning met with a very serious accident, which will probably prove fatal. The victim was in the act of assisting one of the clerks to take down some pitchforks from a shelf, when he slipped, falling almost headfirst to the basement below, fracturing two ribs and sustaining internal injuries. As soon as possible the sufferer was taken to a nearby doctor's, where a further examination showed that he had also fractured his skull. He was taken to a friend's house on a stretcher and died in a few hours. Deceased leaves a wife and one daughter.

POLICE COURT.

Wm. J. Cronk was arrested and brought before Police Magistrate Hankin on Thursday morning to answer to a charge of assault on his sister-in-law. He was given two months in Jail at hard labor without fine, for the purpose of giving the authorities time to look up his character. While in the witness box yesterday morning the prisoner admitted having a wife and eight children in Syracuse, N.Y., and also a wife and four children at Oak Hill, Ont., and it was very evident to the Magistrate that his object in coming to Napanee was to break up a happy home here, which he has almost succeeded in doing.

GRAND TRUNK THROUGH SYSTEM OF CHECKING BAGGAGE TO ENGLAND.

The system adopted by the Grand Trunk Railway System in connection with the Trans-Atlantic Steamship Lines for through checking of baggage to Liverpool, England, via the ports of Montreal and Quebec, is proving very popular and is being more and more used as the system becomes generally known, and the Company is receiving many complimentary letters and notices for inaugurating this improved method for checking and handling the Trans-Atlantic baggage.

Passengers contemplating a Trans-Atlantic trip desiring to avail themselves of this system of through checking to Liverpool, are requested to see that all baggage is properly labelled with the steamship label of the line by which they intend sailing, and that labels reading "wanted" or "not wanted" as the case may be, are attached in order that state-room baggage may be kept separate from baggage not wanted until arrival at destination. Labels for this purpose will be furnished by the different steamship agents from whom transportation is purchased, and should be attached to baggage by owner before presenting baggage at station for checking.

Orange Celebration.

AT TAMWORTH.

One of the most successful and best attended Orange celebrations held in the County of Lennox and Addington, took place at the thriving Village of Tamworth, on Tuesday, the 17th inst. The day was all that could be desired and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

It was estimated that there were about four thousand people in attendance, and twelve lodges participated in the procession.

Splendid music was furnished by two excellent brass bands from Enterprise and Sydenham. After the procession had been formed on the Orangeville grove, where addresses were delivered by Bro. Beecher Peters, of Toronto; W. J. Paul, M.P.P., Jas. Reid, M.P.P., and Rev. Mr. Whitley. Bro. Richard Fraser and others. The dinner was efficiently occupied by the Tamworth ladies' aid, in the Town Hall.

Notwithstanding the great crowd, all were well served, and the ladies are to be congratulated upon their success.

The afternoon was spent in sports and by the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church, who served meals at the Town Hall. We understand that a neat sum was cleared, and that the society will set about $500 to their credit.

On the return trip the Napanee train was derailed, going through Tamworth, caused by one of the rails spreading. Fortunately, however, no one was hurt, but the train was brought to a standstill. Two cars were secured from the north bound train and the Napanee contingent arrived home safely. The north bound train had to clear away the debris and did not reach Napanee until 4 a.m. the following morning. Fortunately no serious damage was done.

THE INQUEST.

An inquest on the death of little Do-a Gordon, who was killed at the C. P. R. crossing of the G. T. R., Thursday, the 12th inst., was held by Dr. G. H. Cowan, Coroner, on the afternoon at 5 o'clock. The following jury was empanelled: Wm. James Daly, Foreman; M. S. Madole, F. H. Perry, W. Vandusen, Stephen Madden, W. T. Waller, W. C. Jenkins, M. T. Wagah, B. B. Vanslyck, A. T. Howe, Nathan Fellows, E. Ming, V.S.

After the jury had been sworn, the inquest adjourned until Friday evening, in order to secure the attendance of the engineer and fireman of the freight train, and the conductor of the mail train.

Before going into the evidence perhaps it would be as well to give our readers a clearer idea of the situation at the time of the accident.

There are several tracks at the Selby crossing, but the two main tracks used by the Grand Trunk are called the north track and south track. A freight train stopped at the west end of the yard, near where the B. of Q. crossing, and remained uncoupled and ran down through the yard to the north track. The ballast train was standing on the south track, when the girl came to the crossing on her way down town. She waited for it to pass and as soon as the path was clear, commenced her walk to cross the tracks but the engine and tender coming back from coupling on to the train, she did not she saw it or could get out of the way.

It appears that the conductor of the ballast train should have taken extra precaution, which is very dangerous. While the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway have fulfilled their duties, there seems to be something lacking in the way of precaution.

If it were suitable for the railway to have a man on the front end of a tender when backing up in such a manner it is quite likely that the accident could have been averted. A flagman would be a more proper and safer way of looking after the level crossings, which are becoming more frequently an account of the large number of the public who use them. The policeman should used extra vigilance in looking either way every frequent whereby while attempting to cross a number of tracks. It is quite likely and very necessary indeed that the Grand Trunk officials shall act immediately and provide more proper protection at this dangerous crossing.

Several witnesses were sworn, but as space will not permit us to give the evidence in full, a synopsis of the bearing directly on the case follows:

Eva Bell, sworn, said she was sitting in front of their house a few yards down the hill and saw the accident. Saw the girl dismount from her bicycle on main track in order to allow the ballast train to pass on the north track. Saw the Engine No. 980 had uncoupled from the train and went down to the west end, while backing up that this engine struck the girl, while on the south track, she having mounted her wheel again after the train had passed. The engine did not stop, but both engine and tender passed over the body, which was dragged between the two for about 100 yards. If the fireman had been in his place he could have told the engineer who might have stopped the engine in a very few seconds. There was no bell rung that I heard, and no whistle.

Jobb. Forrester, engineer, of Belleville, was then sworn, stating that the accident until signalled to stop, when the fireman came down and told what was the matter. The whistle was sounded and bell rung. As far as I could see the crossing there was no one on it. Had the train stopped the Grand Trunk for 21 years and never had an accident or death. A gang of men could not have stopped the train. Came nearly having an accident at this place some years ago and had for his fireman a young lad and a woman.

Jno. Burns, fireman, sworn, said he knew nothing of how the accident occurred. Had I been aware that there were some cars of the B. of Q. train left standing I would have let on seeing her. Double the danger on my side of the tender than at the engineer's.

After evidence was taken the jury retired, but an agreement was not reached and the jury met again last evening, and we understand that a verdict was rendered in the case as follows:

That after carefully considering all the evidence submitted in this inquisition we find that the deceased came to her death by accidental means, and we are of the opinion that Dora Morden came to her death by being struck by the tender of a G. T. R. engine No. 980 while backing across the highway running north and south, Napanee, and known as Selby Road."

We learn from the evidence that the deceased, a girl about the age of 15 years, was killed instantly while she was attempting to cross the south track with her bicycle, after having passed the north track, and that the engine was backing up the train on the west side of said highway and crossed east over the said highway, and that at the time of the accident the tender was on the south track.

We, the undersigned jurymen, are of the opinion that the said deceased came to her death partly through her own carelessness in not looking before crossing, for the said tender, and partly through the negligence of the engineer in charge of the said engine in not having a man on the said tender to look after the crossing, for the said tender, and partly through the negligence of the said engineer

Danger Signals for Women.

We don't wish to unduly frighten any one, and yet any woman who has any of the symptoms which follow should remember that every day's neglect of them makes her condition a little worse—a little harder to cure.

Backache, bearing-down pains, cold feet, habitual constipation, and headaches, indigestion, nervousness, instability, melancholy, a tired or run-down feeling, any menstruation trouble or female weakness.

If you have any of the above symptoms, Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women, taken now will do what no medicine may be able to do for you later, that is, prevent a serious illness or some chronic disorder.

These tablets are made expressly to meet and overcome the above symptoms. And they are doing it for women every day.

Before finishing one box you will wonder where that old backache has gone. There will be no more dread of the monthly periods. That tired feeling, nervousness and irritability which comes from a run-down condition will have disappeared and you will begin to feel like yourself again.

Now don't say "Don't believe it" and not take the tablets. The risk is small, only 50c. If you have any of these symptoms, you need the tablets more than the money.

ARDEN.

On the evening of July 5th, there assembled at the home of Mr. Henry B. Sandercock, of Arden, a number of friends from Arden mission, to recognize his faithful services as a local preacher, extending over a period of forty years. A very enjoyable evening was spent, during which the following address was read by Rev. A. C. Hoffman, the presentation being made by Mr. Andrew Osborne, Recording Steward, and Mr. Enos Wood, class leader and exhorter.

Mr. Henry B. Sandercock,—

Dear Friend and Brother,—We believe the time has arrived when the people of Arden Mission owe it to themselves as well as to you, to place on record some expression of their love and esteem with which you are held among them, and to show their appreciation of your faithful and self-sacrificing labors in the interests of the mission for a period of over forty years. While you have not felt your responsibility to the church in your other work as well, we especially feel that as a local preacher on the mission you are deserving of special recognition. In this capacity you have discharged your duty faithfully, never allowing your personal feelings when called upon to fill appointments, many times travelling the mission on a Sunday, when owning to your position as a farmer it was not convenient for you to be absent from home. In so doing you have set an example worthy of imitation, and

The BRETHREN

By Rider Haggard, Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Cleopatra," "Allan Quatermain," "The World's Desire," etc.

Copyright, 1903-1904, by H. Rider Haggard.

When they had slept awhile, Godwin and Wulf rose and fed their horses. After they had washed and groomed them, they tested and dried on their armour, then took them down to the spring to drink their fill, as their comforters did. Also Wulf, who was cunning in war, brought with him four large wineskins which he filled carefully against this hour, and filling them with pure water, fastened two of them with thongs behind the saddle of Godwin and two behind his own. Further, he filled the water-bottles at their saddlebows, saying:

"At least we will be among the last to die of thirst."

Then they went back and watched the host break its camp, which it did with no little hindrance, for many of them knew of the danger in which they stood; moreover, the tale of Godwin's vision had been spread abroad. Not knowing where to go, they and Egbert, the bishop of Nazareth—who was unarmed and seen upon a mule—followed behind. He would not—joined themselves to the great body of Saladin who followed the king. As they did so, the Templars, five hundred strong, came up, a fierce and gallant band, and the Master, who was at their head, saw the brethren and called out, pointing to the wineskins which were hung behind their saddles:

"What do these water-carriers here among brave knights who trust in God alone?"

Wulf would have answered, but Godwin bade him be silent, saying:

"Fall back; we will find less illmeaned company."

So they stood on one side and bowed themselves as the Cross went by, guarded by the mailed bishop of Acre. Then came Reginald de Chatillon, Saladin's enemy, the cause of all this woe, who saw them and cried:

"Sir Knight, whatever they may say, I know you for brave men, for I have heard the fame of your deeds among the Assassins. There is room for you among my suite—follow me."

"As well join an unclean," said Godwin. "Let us go where we are led."

So they followed him.

By the time that the army reached Kenna, where once the water was made wine, the July sun was already hot, and the spring was so soon drunk dry that many men could get no water. On they pushed into the desert lands below, which lay between them and Tiberias, and were bordered on the right and left by hills. Now clouds of dust were seen moving across the plains, and in the heart of them bodies of Saracen horsemen, which continually attacked the vanguard under count Raymond, and as continually retreated before they could be struck, slaying many with their spears and arrows. Also these came round behind them, and charged the rear guard, where marched the Templars and the light-armed troops named Turcopoles, and the band of Reginald de Chatillon, with which rode the brethren.

From this rear guard, broken into long harassed line, broken now into fragments, struggled forward across the rough, stony ground, men, camels and horses became exhausted, and the soldiers cried to their captains to lead them to water. But in that place there was no water.

The rearguard fell behind, worn out with constant attacks that must be repelled in the burning heat, so that there came a great gap between it and the king who marched in the centre. Messages reached them to push on, but they could not, and at length camp was pitched in the desert near a place called Maresacala, and upon this camp Raymond and his vanguard were forced back. As Godwin and Wulf rode up, they saw him come in bringing his wounded with him, and heard him pray the king to push on and at all hazards to cut his way through to the lake, where they might drink—and heard the king say that he could not, since the soldiers would march no more that day.

Then Raymond wrung his hands in despair and rode back to his men, crying aloud:

"Alas! alas! Oh! Lord God, alas! We are dead, and Thy Kingdom is lost!"

That night none slept, for all were athirst, and who can sleep with a burning fever in his veins? Godwin tell in Ecclesiastes, and Wulf never laughed at because of the water-skins they carried on their horses. Rather did great nobles come to them, and almost on their knees crave for the boon of a single cup. Having watered their horses sparingly from a bowl, they gave what they could, till at length only two skins remained, and one of these was split by a thief, who crept up and slashed it with his knife that he might drink while the water ran to waste. After this the brethren drew their swords and watched, vowing that they would kill any man who so much as touched the skin which was left.

Others crept up behind, seized his arms and dragged him to the ground.

All that night through there arose a confused clamour from the camp, of which the burden seemed to be, "Water! Give us water!" Also from without came the shouts of the Saracens calling upon Allah. Here, too, the hot ground was covered with scrub dried to tinder by the summer drought, and up this the Saracens set fire so that the smoke rolled down on the Christian host and choked them, and the place became a hell.

Day dawned at last, and the army was formed up in order of battle, its two wings being thrown forward. Thus they struggled on, those of them that were not too weak to stir, who were slaughtered as they lay. Nor as yet did the Saracens attack them, since they knew that the sun was stronger than all their spears. On they laboured towards the northern wells, till about mid-day the battle began with a flight of arrows so thick that for awhile it hid the heavens.

After this came charge and counter-charge, attack and repulse, and always above the noise of war that dreadful cry of water. What chance Godwin and Wulf never knew, for the smoke and dust blinded them so that they could see but a little way. At length there was a last furious charge, and the knights with whom they were drove the dense mass of Saracens like a serpent of steel leaving a broad trail of dead behind them. Then they pulled rein and wiped the sweat from their eyes it was to find themselves amid the thousands of camels upon the top of a steep hill; of which the sides were thick with dry grass and bush that throve in the desert.

"The Rood! The Rood! Rally round the Rood!" said a voice, and looking behind them they saw the Cross and jewelled fragment of the true Cross set upon a car drawn by the bishop of Acre. Then the smoke of the burning grass rose up and hid it from their sight.

Now began one of the most hideous fights that is told of in the history of the world. Again and again the Saracens attacked in thousands, and again and again they were driven back by the desperate valour of the Franks, who fought on like lions at bay, mad with thirst. A black-bearded man stumbled up to the brethren, his tongue protruding from his jaw, and they knew him for the Master of the Templars.

"For the love of Christ, give me to drink," he said, recognising them as the knights at whom he had mocked at water-carriers.

They gave him of the little they had left, and while they and their horses drank the rest themselves, saw him rush down the hill refreshed, shaking his red sword. Then came a pause, and they heard the voice of the bishop of Nazareth, who had clung to them all this while, saying, as though to himself:

"And here is was that the Saviour preached the Sermon on the Mount. Yes, He preached the words of peace upon this very spot. Oh! I cannot believe that He will desert us—I cannot be!"

While the Saracens held off, the soldiers began to put up the king's pavilion, and with it other tents around the rock on which stood the Cross.

"Do they mean to camp here?" asked Wulf bitterly.

"Peace," answered Godwin; "they hope to make a wall about the Rood. But it is of no avail, for this is the place of my dream."

Wulf shrugged his shoulders.

"At least, let us die well," he said. Then the last attack began. Up the hillside rose dense volumes of smoke, and with the smoke came the Saracens, thicker than ever they were back; thrice they came on. At the fourth onset few of the Franks could fight more, for thirst had conquered them on this waterless hill of Hattin. They lay down upon the dry grass with gaping jaws and protruding tongues, and let themselves be slain or taken prisoners. A great company of the Templars broke through the ring and rushed at the scarlet tent. It rocked to and fro, then down it fell in a red heap, entangling the king in its folds.

At the foot of the Cross, Rufinus the bishop of Acre, still fought on bravely. Suddenly an arrow struck him in the throat, and throwing his arms wide, he fell to earth. Then the Saracens hurled themselves upon the Rood, tore it from its place, and with mockery and spittings bore it down the hill towards their camp, as ants may be seen carrying a little stick into their nest, while all who were left alive of the Christian army stared upwards, as though they had seen some miracle from Heaven. But no angels appeared in the brazen sky, and knowing that God had deserted them, they shrieked aloud in their shame and wretchedness.

"Come," said Godwin to Wulf in a strange, quiet voice. "We have seen enough. It is time to die. Look! yonder below us is the king's pavilion, our old regiment, and amongst them Saladin, for I see his banner. Having had water, we and our horses are still fresh and strong. Now, let us make an end of which I will tell in Ecclesiastes. Charge for the flag of Saladin!"

Wulf nodded, and side by side they sped down the hill. Scimitars flashed at them, arrows struck upon their mail and shields blazoned with the Death's-head D'Arcy crest. Through it all they went unscathed, and while the army of the Saracens stared, at the foot of the Horn of Hattin turned their horses' heads straight for the royal standard of Saladin. On they struggled, felling or riding down a foe at every stride. On, still on, although Flame and Smoke bled from a score of wounds.

They were among the Mamelukes, where their line was thin; by Heaven! they were through them, and riding straight at the well-known figure of the Sultan, mounted on his white horse with his young son and his emir, the prince Afranan, at his side.

"Saladin for you, Hassan for me," shouted Wulf.

Then they met, and all the host of Islam cried out in dismay as they saw the Commander of the Faithful and his horse borne to the earth before the last desparing charge of these mad Christian knights. Another instant, and the Sultan was on his feet again, and a score of scimitars were striking at Godwin. His horse, Flame sank down dying, but he sprang from the saddle, swinging the long sword, whose Saladin recognised the crest upon his buckler, and cried out:

"Yield you, Sir Godwin! You have done enough for honour!"

But Godwin, who would not yield, answered:

"When I am dead—not before."

Thereupon Saladin spoke a word, and while certain of his Mamelukes engaged Godwin in front, keeping out of reach of that red and terrible sword, others crept up behind, and springing on him, seized his arms and dragged his to the ground, where they bound him fast.

Meanwhile Wulf had fared otherwise, for it was his horse Smoke, already stabbed to the vitals, that fell as he plunged on prince Hassan. Yet he also arose but little hurt, and cried out:

Thus, Hassan, old foe and friend, we meet at last in war. Come, I would pay the debt I owe you for that dungeon wine, man to man and sword to sword."

"Indeed, it is due, Sir Wulf," answered the prince, laughing. "Guards, touch not this brave knight who has dared so much to reach me. Sultan, I ask a boon. Between Sir Wulf and me there is an ancient quarrel that can only be washed away in blood. Let it be decided here and now, and let this be your decree—that if I fall in fair fight, none shall set upon my conqueror, and no vengeance shall be taken for my blood."

"Good," said Saladin. "Then Sir Wulf shall be my prisoner and no more, as his brother is already. I owe it to the man who saved my life when we were friends. Give the Frank to drink that the fight may be fair."

So they gave Wulf a cup of which he drank, and when he had done it was handed to Godwin. For even the Mamelukes knew and loved these brethren who had been their officers, and praised the fierce charge that they had dared to make alone.

Hassan sprang to the ground, saying:

"Your horse is dead, Sir Wulf, so we must fight afoot."

"Generous as ever," laughed Wulf.

"Even the poisoned wine was a gift!"

"If so, for this I thank you, sir," answered Hassan with a smile.

Then they faced each other, and oh! the scene was strange. Up on the slopes of Hattin the fight still raged. There amidst the smoke and fires of the burning grass companies of soldiers stood back to back while the Saracens wheeled round them, thrusting and striking with fury, yet they fell. Here and there knights charged singly or in groups, and so came to death or capture. And in the valley beneath of foot soldiers were being slaughtered, while the waters of the lake were pitiless. Towards the camp of Saladin a company advanced with sounds of triumph, carrying aloft a black stump which was the holy Rood, while others drove or led mobs of prisoners, among them the king and his chosen knights.

The wilderness was red with blood, the air was rent with shouts of victory and cries of agony or despair. And there, in the midst of it all, ringed round with grave, courteous Saracens, stood the gaily clad brave Hassan in his white robe and jewelled turban, facing the great Christian knight, with harness hacked and reddened, the light of battle shining in his fierce eyes, and a smile upon his stained features.

For those who watched the battle was forgotten—or, rather, its interest was centred on this point.

"It will be a good fight," said one of them to Godwin, whom they had suffered to rise, "now though your brother is the younger and the heavier man, he is hurt and weary, whereas the emir is fresh and unwounded. Ah! they are at it!"

Hassan's sword struck first and the blow went home. Falling upon the point of Wulf's steel helm, the heavy razor-edged scimitar glanced from it and shore away the links from the flap which hung upon his shoulder, causing the Frank to stagger. Again he struck, this time upon the shield, and so heavily that Wulf fell upon his knees.

"Your brother is sped," said one Saracen captain to Godwin, but God will only answered:

"Wait."

As he spoke Wulf twisted his body out of reach of a third blow, and while Hassan stepped forward with the weight of the missed stroke, placed his hand upon the ground, and springing to his feet, cut sideways for eight paces.

"He flies!" cried the Saracens; but again Godwin said, "Wait." Now was there long to wait.

For now, throwing aside his buckler and grasping the great sword in both hands, with a shout of "A D'Arcy! A D'Arcy!" Wulf leapt at Hassan as a wounded lion leaps. The sword wheeled and fell, and lo! the shield of the Saracen was severed in two. Again it fell, and his turbaned helm was cloven. A third time, and the right arm and shoulder with the scimitar that grasped it seemed to spring from his body, and Hassan sank dying to the ground.

Wulf stood and looked at him, while the prince writhed and gasped upon those who watched, for they loved this emir. Hassan beckoned to the victor with his left hand, and throwing down his sword to show that he feared no treachery, Wulf came to him and knelt beside him.

"A good stroke," Hassan said faintly, "that could shear the double links of Damascus steel as though they were silk. Well, as I told you long ago, I knew that the hour of our meeting in war would be an ill hour for me, and my debt is paid. Farewell, brave knight. Would I could hope that we should meet in Paradise! Take that star-jewel, the badge of my House, from my turban and wear it in memory of me. Long, long and happy be your days."

Then, while Wulf held him in his arms, Saladin came up and spoke to him, till he fell back and was dead.

Thus died Hassan, and thus ended the battle at Hattin, which broke the power of the Christians in the East.

CHAPTER XIX.

When Hassan was dead, at a sign from Saladin a captain of the Mamelukes named Abdullah unfastened the jewel from the emir's turban and handed it to Wulf. It was a glorious star-shaped thing, made of great emeralds set round with diamonds, and the captain Abdullah, who like all Easterns loved such ornaments, looked at it greedily, and muttered:

"Alas! that an unbeliever should wear the enchanted Star, the ancient Luck of the House of Hassan!" a saying that Wulf remembered.

He took the jewel, then turned to Saladin and said, pointing to the dead body of Hassan:

"Have I your peace, Sultan, after such a deed?"

"Did I not give you and your brother drink?" asked Saladin with meaning. "Whoever dies, you are safe. There is but one sin which I will not pardon you—you know what it is," and he looked at them. "As for Hassan, he was my beloved friend and servant, but you slew him in fair fight, and his soul is now in Paradise. None in my army will raise a blood feud against you on account of his slaughter, and I, Saladin, am the last of his kin. Now, I will have none of your mercy at such a price, nor do I bow the knee to your god of the Christians, nor perish in the faith of Christ, and, being weary of the world, am content to go to Him."

Saladin sprang to his feet, his very beard bristling with wrath, and drawing his sabre, shouted aloud:

"You scorn Mahomet! Behold! I avenge Mahomet upon you! Take him away!" And he struck him with the flat of his scimitar.

Then Mamelukes leapt upon the prince. Dragging him to the entrance of the tent, they forced him to his knees and there beheaded him in sight of the soldiers and of the other prisoners.

Then, bravely enough, died Reginald de Chatillon, whom the Saracens called prince Arnat. In the hush that followed the terrible deed king Guy said to Godwin:

"Ask the Sultan if it is my turn next."

"Nay," answered Saladin; "kings do not kill kings, but that truce-breaker has met with no more than his deserts."

Then came a scene still more dreadful. Saladin and his guard came out of his tent, and standing over the body of Reginald, bade them parade the captive Templars and Hospitallers before him. There were about a hundred and fifty of them, or over two hundred, for it was easy to distinguish them by the red and white crosses on their breasts.

"These also are faith-breakers," he shouted, "for they broke the truce which will I rid the world. Ho! my emirs and doctors of the law," and he turned to the great crowd of his captains about him, "take each of you one of them and kill him."

But the emirs hung back, for though fanatics they were brave, and loved not this slaughter of defenceless men, and even the Mamelukes murmured aloud.

Then Saladin cried again:

"They are worthy of death, and he who disobeys my command shall himself be slain."

"Sultan," said Godwin, "we cannot witness such a crime; we ask that we may die with them."

"Nay," he answered; "you have eaten of my salt, and to kill you would be a sin. Come to the tent and see the princess of Baalbec yonder, for there you will see nothing of the death of these dogs. Ho! there, bring on the prisoners."

Up to the brethren turned, and led by a Mameluk, fled aghast for the first time in their lives, past the long lines of Templars and Hospitallers, who in the last red light of the dying day knelt upon the sand and prayed, while the sabre rose to kill them.

They entered the tent, none forbidding them, and at the end of it saw two women crouched together on some cushions, who rose, clinging to each other, when the women saw also advancing toward with a cry of joy, saying:

"So you live—you live!"

"Ay, Rosamund," answered Godwin, "to see this shame—would God that we did not see—while others die. They murder the knights of the holy Orders. To your knees and pray for their passing souls."

So they knelt down and prayed till the tumult died away, and they knew that all was done.

"Oh, my cousins," said Rosamund, as she clasped to her fast at length, "what a hell of wickedness and bloodshed is this in which we dwell! Save me from it if you love me—I beseech you save me!"

"I beseech you, save me."

"We will do our best," they answered; "but let us talk no more of these things which are the decree of God—lest we should go mad. Tell us your story."

But Rosamund had little to tell, except that she had been well treated, and always kept by the person of the Sultan, marching to and fro with his army, for he availed the fulfilment of a dream concerning her. Then they told her all that had chanced to them; also of the vision of Godwin and its dreadful accomplishment, and of the death of Hassan beneath the sword of Wulf. At that story Rosamund wept and shrank from him a little, for though it was this prince who, having slowed her from her home, she loved Hassan. Yet when Wulf said humbly:

"The fault is not mine; it was so fated. Would that I had died instead of this Saracen!' Rosamund answered:

"No, no; I am proud that you should have conquered."

But Wulf shook his head, and said:

"I am not proud. Although weary with that awful battle, I was still the younger and stronger man, though at first he well-nigh mastered me by his skill and quickness. At least we parted friends. Look, he gave me this," and he showed her the great emerald badge which the dying prince had given him.

Masouda, who all this while had sat very quiet, came forward and looked at it.

"Do you know," she asked, "that this jewel is very famous, not only for its value, but because it is said to have belonged to one of the children of the prophet, and to bring good fortune to its owners?"

Wulf smiled.

"It brought little to poor Hassan but now, when my grandsire's sword shore the Damascene steel, it shall never vex clay."

"And sent him swift to Masouda, where he would be at the hands of a gallant foe," answered Masouda. "Nay, all his life this emir was happy and beloved, by his sovereign, his wives, his fellows and his servants, nor do I think that he would have desired another end whose wish was to die in battle with the Franks! At least there is scarce a soldier in the Sultan's army who would not give all he has for yonder trinket, which is known throughout the East as the Star of Hassan. So beware, Sir Wulf, lest you be robbed of murdered although you have eaten the salt of Saladin."

"I remember the captain Abdullah looking at it greedily and lamenting that the Luck of the House of Hassan should pass to an unbeliever," said Wulf. "Well, enough of this jewel and its dangers; I think Godwin has words to say."

"Yes," said Godwin. "We are here in your tent through the kindness of Saladin, who did not wish us to witness the death of our comrades, but to-morrow we shall be separated again. Now if you are to escape—"

"I will escape! I must escape, even if I am recaptured and die for it," broke in Rosamund passionately.

"Speak low," said Masouda. "I saw the eunuch Mesrour pass the door of the tent, and he is a spy—they all are spies."

"If you are to escape," repeated Godwin in a whisper, "it must be within the next few weeks while the army is on the march. The risk is great to all of us—even to you, and we love you dearly, but you are over-sweet to make one, and tell it to us."

She bitted her head to speak, when suddenly a shadow fell upon them. It was that of the head eunuch, Mesrour, a fat, cunning-faced man, who, with a cringing air, bowed before them, saying:

"Your pardon, O Princess. A message has come from Salah-ed-din demanding the presence of these knights at his tent that he has made ready for his noble prisoners."

"We obey," said Godwin, and rising they bowed to Rosamund and to Masouda, then turned to go, leaving the dear jewel where they had been seated.

Very skilfully Mesrour covered it with a fold of his robe, and under shelter of the cold slipped down his hand and grasped it, not knowing that although she seemed to be turned away, Masouda was watching him out of the corner of her eye. Waiting till the eunuch had gone a few yards, she uttered:

"Sir Wulf, are you already weary of the enchanted Star of Fortune, or would you bequeath it to us?"

Now Wulf came back, saying heartily:

"I forgot the thing—who would not at such a time? Where is it? I left it on the cushion."

"Try then hand of Mesrour," said Masouda, "or unwind with a very good smile the eunuch produced it, and said:

"I wished to show you, Sir Knight,

Napanee's Greatest Store

Store Closes at 12.30 p.m. on Fridays up to and including Aug. 17th.

The store brighter and busier than any store you ever saw in July in Napanee.

Why? Its owners have never for a minute during the past dozen years lost sight of the central proposition of the business.

Good Service.

It means so much—big comfortable safe store home;
Vast and well selected stocks of merchandise;
Good store manners;
Good ethics—few cumbering rules;
Fair prices.
All those things are combined in our definition of the term "Good Service."

Store Home.

Do you wonder that a store built on such a liberal plan, prospers and grows and leads.

RED TICKET SALE OF

Men's and Boy's Clothing

Fall Suits, Overcoats, etc., will be on hand very soon. We're winding up the biggest and best year's clothing business we've ever known, and it will take the store all the better to clear decks resolutely. A Special Clearing Price

That will be sure to take them out in quick order. Be on hand early. There are snaps in this sale for you and it will be to your interest to look them up.

It's a brand new proposition—a clothing business run without overstatement, exaggeration or evasions—a clothing store just simply fair—and thoroughly skilled in its trade. To be just good might be very bad for Josh Billings said some folks were so good they were good for nothing. This clothing organization knows, and knowing serves to its very best ability.

DROWNED IN BIG CREEK.

On Sunday noon last, the body of a man was found in Big Creek, adjoining Sam Anelstine's property, South Fredericksburg. The body was badly decomposed, and unrecognizable, and apparently had been in the water about one week. Description: About forty or fifty years of age; clad in a tweed suit, black striped shirt; in the pockets were found two one dollar bills and ninety-nine cents in change; also a note book with addresses of several people in Ireland, and one, Mrs. Kidd, Rossland, and a number of people in Nova Scotia. A story is current that a farmer in Ernesttown had an Irish emigrant boy for a month, and about three weeks ago he left; the farmer thought he was out of his mind. This report is being investigated. Coroner Dr. Cowan and Chief Graham went to Big Creek, Sunday evening and viewed the body, but no inquest will be held. The remains were brought over by Undertaker Carscallen, and interred in the Eastern cemetery, as nearly as can be found out the man's in Wm. Mooney.

That weak, tired condition will soon change by the use of Miller's Compound Iron Pills; 50 doses for 25 cents. For sale at The Medical Hall, Fred. L. Hooper.

One of the most remarkable events that has ever occurred here transpired a couple of weeks ago, when Miss Lizzie Finlay, who has been an invalid for years, was cured by faith or divine healing. She has consulted physicians of Kingston and Toronto, all giving the same verdict that she could not be cured. All they could do was to ease her sufferings by morphine. While attending a meeting at Sydenham held by the Holiness Movement people, her physical agony was so great she prayed God to end it by death or cure her. She told your correspondent, at that she was healed. We can see she is a very different appearing person. Her friends and neighbors rejoice that she is cured. Her appetite is good and she sleeps well, which was not the case formerly. The only thing she complains of is a slight weakness. She has taken no opiates since which would cause weakness. At any rate the fact remains that Miss Finlay is as well as ever she was.

SPRAINED HER ANKLE.

"I slipped on an icy step and sprain ed my right ankle very badly," says Miss Minnie Burgoyne, of Glenwood. It swelled to a tremendous size and caused intense pain. I applied Polson's Nerviline and got prompt relief. The swelling was reduced, and before long I was able to use my foot." For sprains, swellings and muscular pains Nerviline is the one sure remedy. Strong, penetrating, swift to destroy pain—that's Polson's Nerviline. Fifty years in use.

THE IMPERFECT MADE PERFECT.

The special work of the expert optician in charge of the new optical department at The Medical Hall is to correct imperfect vision. Are your glasses satisfactory? Do they cause pain in the head? CHURCH IS TROUBLED.

Picton Anglicans offended by Their Minister's Attendance at Marriage.

Kingston, July 17.—A week ago last Sunday Rev. W. L. Armitage, vicar of St. Mary Magdalene, Picton, announced from the pulpit of the edifice that he was going away for holidays, and that his marriage would take place during that time. He went on to say that while he was amenable to the people indirectly (Canon Loucks being still rector) his wife-to-be was amenable to him alone, and must not be at the back and call of the parish. This very unusual proceeding on the part of the intending groom was made further remarkable, from the Anglican standpoint, by Mr. Armitage advising the congregation to apply to Rev. Mr. Rae, pastor of the Stone Methodist Church, for pastoral ministration, in case of sickness or urgency. Ordinary marriages are done by Rev. Mr. Seabrooke or Milford or Rev. C. R. Depencier of Wellington. South Anglican Church. The congregation is voicing its indignation audibly. Mr. Armitage has caused more comment by being married last Monday at Belleville instead of Picton.

Picton, July 18.—D. J. Parker and R. E. Wright, churchwardens of the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, have issued the following: "There is no truth in the statements from Kingston that the trouble in the church in Picton in reference to Rev. W. L. Armitage. (Signed), R. E. Wright, D. J. Parker, Churchwardens."

ROYAL WEDDING FEAST

UNLIMITED INVITATIONS TO THE GREATEST SINCE WORLD BEGAN

NO EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

Some Refuse, But a Great Host, Including Our Great Men to a Number That Transcends Belief, Accept the Invitations to Be Christians—Intellectual Giants Present—There Are No Classes in the Church.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, July 15.—The familiar parable of the King's wedding supper is presented by the preacher in this sermon in a new light and is made the basis for unlimited invitation to all classes. The text is Matthew xxii, 10. "The wedding was furnished with guests."

Light people are born aristocrats. They love to travel the rough roads instead of the smooth. They profess to despise the form of conformity and piety. Like John the Baptist, they would clothe themselves in skins and banquet upon locusts and wild honey. They believe that primitive man in his dugout, eating his raw meat and herbs as he hunted them day by day, is a better type of the human race than is the product of many battlefields, and the courage the food they eat the more physical and mental strength they will have.

The banquet hall may have a bad name on account of the gourmets and gluttons who make out of its table a function, yet one of the most important political, social, ecclesiastical, financial and literary events of the world has been the banquet hall. When a Gladstone, a Disraeli, a Salisbury and a Balfour wished to express the policy of the British Government, where did they utter their manifestoes? They again and again spoke to the British Empire and to the world over the banquet table, which was spread to celebrate the induction of a new lord mayor or London into office. When Henry W. Grady wanted to bind the new north to the new south with the golden cords of love, where did he do it? At the New England banquet held in New York city in 1886 to celebrate. Forefathers' day. How did New York and America honor the electrical genius, the art of the inventor of the telegraph, Samuel E. B. Morse? By a public dinner on Dec. 7, 1871. How did New York honor the cable triumphs of Cyrus W. Field? In the same way, by a public banquet. Two years later, when all the American pulpit honor one of its greatest theologians a few years ago Henry Ward Beecher, the leader of that whom there was not at that time a more powerful personality in any professorship or chair in the west was given a public banquet given in Chicago in January, 1903. The brainy men of this country do not gather in the banquet hall for a feast. A feast of material viands nearly as much as for a feast of intellectual, moral and spiritual food. That is why I am glad today that this symbol of my text is found in a banquet hall. Furthermore, it is found in the most fascinating of all banquet halls—namely, at a wedding feast.

You know this parable without our going into details. The King wanted to make a great feast to celebrate the wedding of his son. The loving father invites many guests to the wedding, but they all refuse to come. Then the King says to his servants, "Go out into the highways and the hedges and compel them to come." Then the servants go and bring in the new guests. Now, it is my purpose to talk to you about this banquet hall and to point out to you the different characteristics and the social status of the guests. In thinking over of this parable we often dwell on the direct lesson of the wide gospel invitation it conveys without noticing the characteristics of the men, the women and the children who were finally persuaded to sit down at the wedding feast of the royal Son of God, Jesus Christ.

Let us find a vantage ground to stand on. Let us, in the first place, learn how we can best study the personal characteristics of these wedding guests. Shall we do this by entering the brilliantly lighted banquet hall and watching the actions of the guests who are gathered about the table? Nay, You cannot tell what a man is like when he is dressed up and out for an evening entertainment. In order to find out what he truly is you must go and talk with him at his work. His Sunday clothes are not the true index of his life. Many a man has gone to an evening reception in a borrowed dress suit. Many a woman who is most elaborately appareled for a party is a slattern when in her own home. Thus in order to study the different characteristics of the wedding guests we should find out the first men and women and children you meet. Make no exceptions to this rule. Slight no one. Ask all who will to come." Now, who do you suppose the servant naturally first accosted? Probably the most conspicuous person in the street. It was doubtless the rich merchant or the military chieftain in his chariot or charger, or it was the royal prince driving in his chariot. These men were naturally the most conspicuous in that crowded thoroughfare, therefore they were the first to whom I think the servant was called. "Come! The King bids thee to come to the marriage of his son. Come, and come now!" But many of these rich men, the intellectual leaders, refused to come. Very likely they were among those whom the King had invited and who may have already refused the invitation. Some of all classes refused to come. But there were many of the intellectual world who did come, and those equally of the intellectual leaders of the world to-day. Who? Come! Think!

Did you ever try to estimate how many of our great men are Christians? Their numbers almost transcend human belief. Just study them in a political or governmental sense. A few years ago the editor of the New York Herald sent forth a letter to all the governors of this country and, I believe, to all the members of the United States Congress and to the leaders both of the army and the navy, also to the justices of the supreme court of the president of the United States and his Cabinet and to distinguished educators and notable persons of the land. Seven. The letter, which was addressed to all alike, read: "Are you a friend of Christianity? Do you believe that Christianity is the friend of mankind? Does your belief extend to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to Jesus Christ as Christ and to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence?" The answers came, five, ten of the scores and hundreds. They showed that from the President in the White House down to the humble executive of the western territory nearly all the governors, nearly all the senators and congressmen, nearly all the great leaders of our army and navy, were either out and out members of the Christian church or respecters of the same. I kept those replies in my scrapbook. I could quote many of them now if I had the time. However, from memory I can say this—that nearly all of our great leaders in governmental circles were ready to confess that their only hope for eternal salvation was the cross of Jesus Christ. Indeed, I believe if a statecraft I believe will also be found true of medicine and of every other department of human activity. Indeed, life if the statistician would only compiles for us the records.

Do not talk to me about there being no intellectual giants in the banquet hall of the Divine Bridegroom. Why, here you can see the intellectual leaders everywhere around you. Agassiz, once said that the greatest feast ever attended was when he visited the great German naturalist, Oken. Oken was rich in fame, but poor in gold in pocket. Therefore he placed before Agassiz but two dishes—one of potatoes boiled and one of potatoes roasted. But while the young naturalist sat by the side of the great scientist Oken unfolded before him his treasures of natural philosophy. "Never before," wrote Agassiz, "were such potatoes grown on this planet, for the mind of the man seemed to enter into what we ate socially together, and I devoured his intellect while munching his potatoes. I repeat it—I never ate such a dinner before or since." Yes, among the great naturalists, was feasting because he was sitting at the table of Oken, so many of the great intellectual giants are feasting because they are sitting at the marriage banquet of Christ. They are feasting because they eat or what they drink as long as Christ sits at the head of the table and they see him in the midst of them. When a famous English writer lay ill a few years ago the nurse heard him talking. She went to the door and heard him feebly murmuring the words, "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep." I beg prayer pardon," said the nurse when she knew that he was praying. "I thought you wanted something." "I do," faintly replied Rudyard Kipling. "I want my heavenly Father to hear me and that right now." Yes, that Heavenly Father is not the hope of Rudyard Kipling alone. He is the hope of thousands of leaders of the world in almost every department of life. Am I wrong in asserting that the intellectual giants of the world among the guests at the King's banquet which he gives for his Divine Son?

But no sooner does the messenger of the King give the invitation to the merchant prince and to the military chieftain or to the member of the sanhedrin than methinks I see him put his hand upon the shoulder of a poor man who is holding his master's horse and say: "Won't you come to the King's marriage feast?" The King bids me ask you to come also." "Ah, no," answers the servant; "I cannot come. My master would not allow it. He would not hire me a day if I did not keep in my social place. I can harness up his chariot and drive him to the temple, but I would not dare stand by his side in the temple of worship. The bridegroom's banquet is only for the aristocrat. It is spread for kings and queens. It is not for the plebeian. I am only a servants' table adjoining the King's banquet hall I might come, but you would not have me sit at the table of the bridegroom on one side of me and my master on the other. Nay, this invitation is not for me." "Yes, it is, my friend," answers the King's messenger. "This invitation is for the kitchen as well as for the parlor, for the cellar as well as for the mighty potentate."

Some people who are trying to build their fortunes on the rock of ages think, "They seem to think that the banquet hall of the Royal King can be controlled by a syndicate of capitalists or by social classes, even as a syndicate of real estate men can buy up a section of land and lay it out in building lots and decide who will live there and who will not. You know, of course, how this is done. It is by imposing "building restrictions." After the land has been laid out in building lots, the owners say to the buyers: "Now, this lot is worth $5,000. You cannot buy it and build any house upon it worth less than $4,000. We do this in order to secure a high neighborhood, that only the wealthy can come in. We do not want the poor here. Neither do we want those who cannot move in our social set." Thus some class churches would bar the humble and the poor out of the house of God where they worship. But, my brother, the gold lace of a king and the silk robe of a princess are not essential factors for entering into this banquet hall of the King's son. God does not say, "You can come if you are able to build a house worth $10,000"; or, "You can come if you are a university graduate"; or, "You can come if your family has a coat of arms." But God does say, "You can come, though you are only a King's coronet or a King's livery, as long as you come in the name of Jesus Christ." Oh, servant, holding thy master's horse; oh, humble man, working as clerk in the store; oh, nursegirl, rocking the baby to sleep in the nursery, the King's messenger bids thee come to the marriage feast of his Son.

But while we follow the King's messenger down the highways or the public streets and hear him say to men on the right and to men on the left, "Come, come, come to the marriage of the King's son," I see him dart off to this side. He is about to disappear in the doorway of an adjoining house. "Where are you going, messenger?" I say. "The King did not bid you to enter his sanctum." "Yes, he did," answers the messenger. "He bid me enter every man's home. Therefore, into the highways." That is a private home. That is not a public street. Every man's home is his castle, and you have no right to enter it." "No right? Listen to what I say." "Why, if I did not enter some homes there would be thousands of invalids who would never be invited to come to the King's banquet. Did you not see the pale cheek of that dried sick woman at the window? I am going to tell her to come to the marriage banquet of the King's son."

We enter the house and go into the sickroom. The nurse meets us at the door and says: "Hush! Don't make a noise. She is very sick to-day. She is falling very rapidly. She has been an invalid in this room for five, ten or even twenty years. Her time of departure is now not far off." "I know it," says the King's messenger. "I know all that. She had too many pains here. She has suffered enough. She must get up out of this bed and sit down at the royal table. She must renew her strength. She shall mount up with wings as eagles. She shall run and not be weary. She shall walk and not faint." "But," says the nurse, "she cannot even sit up. She is a cripple, paralyzed." "I know it," says the messenger, "but remember I have not come to bid her to come to the King's table. Remember I have come to ask her to attend the banquet of the King's son. If my lord is willing to take her to come, surely he will give to her the needful strength with which to attend to his banquet hall and attend his son's feast." "Would you like to come, suffering invalid?" asks the messenger. "Will you rise up and come now?"

What a blessed and glorious time that will be when all the sick and the helpless who for months and years have been counted among the "shut-ins" shall attend the banquet hall of the King's Son! When one of the greatest ministers of the world a few years ago was dying in the same house with a suffering grandchild, a lifelong invalid, was sobbign in the hall. As a friend of my mother was passing into the sickroom she stopped and spoke to the invalid child. "Is grandpa better?" the little girl asked. "No; he is dying," was the answer. "Oh," she said, "why did not God take me and leave him? I am of so little use in the world, and he is of so much use." Aye, when the King's banquet is to be given God's messenger will come and get thee, weak, invalid grandchild, as well as grandmother. You have suffered long enough in that dark room. God has heard your prayers. God's messenger will call soon, and then you, too, you will not have to go into the banquet hall on a crutch. You shall not have to be carried there on a litter. You will walk there; you will leap there even as the lame man whom Peter spoke to at the temple leaped and walked into the temple leaping and singing and praising God. The banquet, the banquet of the King, the banquet of the King's Son—even for the sick chambers.

Thus 'as I go to that banquet door and push it a little open I find the strangest assortment of people. You would not believe these people are invited unless you come and look for yourself. But as we are to-day following the King's messenger and as we hear him saying to this man and to that, "Come to the marriage," comes to the divine wedding assembly suddenly turns to us and says, "Friends, will you come also to the marriage banquet of the King's Son?" "Oh," some of us answer, "do not worry about me. I am all right. I am a member. I am a Christian. I was born in a Christian home. In a few years I will come, but not now. I expect to be saved; but like the thief on the cross, I expect to be saved at the last moment. It is only that I have to do in my childhood like 'Lord, save me,' and it will be all right."

Is that so, my brother? I doubt that. Let it be well, I pray, if you have grown up in Christian homes, are not willing to be saved now in all probability will never be saved at all. I like the interpretation which an old minister gave to a gentleman who was dying. He said: "My friend, you expect to be saved, like the thief on the cross or like the man who was asked to go to work in the eleventh hour in all probability that was the first invitation they had ever had to work for Christ. Now, I pray you ever stop to think that in all probability the thief upon the cross had spent a whole lifetime with thieves and robbers and had never before been asked to come to Christ until he was dying on the cross of Christ?" Oh, yes, at the eleventh hour men can be saved who have never heard the gospel invitation before, but for the most part those men who, like ourselves, have been born in Christian homes and who have grown up in the church and who have heard the invitation to come to the marriage banquet of the King's Son and have refused will in all probability never come at the eleventh hour.

Have we received the King's invitation which the messenger is giving to us now?

Canada's Fortieth Anniversary.

The celebration of Dominion Day was marked by an unusual manifestation of national feeling. Many of the editorials were not perfunctory, says The Toronto Star, but dealt fully with the history of Confederation and the progress of the country since 1867. There were also references to the nobler aims of the future. The death of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's father, and the anniversary gave another impulse to thought on national questions. Next year will be the fortieth anniversary of Confederation, and that anniversary will probably be celebrated in some special manner, with honors to the last two surviving fathers of Confederation. There are still with us, and to such veterans as Sir Richard Cartwright, who can give many personal recollections of those troubled times.

DISEASED KIDNEYS.

MADE SOUND AND STRONG THROUGH DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

"Two doctors told me that I was incurable, but thanks to Dr. William's Pink Pills I am now a well man to-day." This statement was made by Mrs. Ed. Rose, of St. Catharines, to a reporter, who hearing of her remarkable cure called to see her. "A few years ago while living in Hamilton, continued Mrs. Rose, I was attacked with kidney trouble. The doctor lulled me into a state of false security, while the disease continued to undermine my health. I was not getting better, I consulted a specialist, who told me that the trouble had developed into Bright's disease and that I was incurable. I had dwindled to a mere shadow and suffered from pain in the back and often a difficulty in breathing. Insomnia next came to add to my tortures and I passed dreary, sleepless nights, and felt that I could not long live. In this disparing condition my husband urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and to please him I began to take them. After using several boxes I felt the pills were helping me and I kept on trying in the same way. I had used some twenty boxes, when I was again restored to perfect health, and every symptom of the trouble had disappeared. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills certainly brought me back from the grave, and I thank God for it, and have since enjoyed the best of health."

Every drop of blood in the body is filtered through the kidneys. If the blood is weak or watery the kidneys have no strength for their work and leave the blood unfiltered and poor. Then the kidneys get clogged with painful poisonous impurities, which bring aching backs and Bright's disease.

The only hope is to strike without delay at the root of the trouble in the blood and the kidneys. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make new blood. They flush the kidneys clean, heal their inflammation and give them strength for their work. Common kidney pills only touch the symptoms—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure the cause. That is why they are so good and at the same time improve the health in every way. But you must get the genuine pills with the full name, Dr. William' Pink Pills for Pale People, on the wrapper around each box. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50. Write the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

The Best Flour, Dafoe's Nonesuch, Dafoe's Manitoba Patent

By numerous tests by the best bakers the above mentioned grades have been proved to be the best flours in the market.

When buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and patronize your home mill, thereby producing fresh bread and scones that you can purchase cheaper than the product of the Western mill, which has to be transported thousands of miles, at great expense and usually, when it reaches you, of inferior quality.

The great advantage of the farmer or the mechanic sends to Toronto or elsewhere for flour, when he can get at the home store just as good, but be does not hesitate to pay from $1 to $2 more per barrel for it. Then, and sell you an inferior flour for more money than you can purchase the home product for, every bag of which is guaranteed.

Choice corn meal and buckwheat flour always on hand. Chopping being a specialty, with the best machinery in the trade.

SECRET IS OUT

FORMULA OF MI-O-NA MADE PUBLIC, A CURE FOR STOMACH TROUBLES.

Our leading druggists are very anxious to have Mi-o-na, a remedy which they sell as a cure for stomach troubles, tested rigidly in every case of heart-burn, acute dyspepsia, pain on the stomach, loss of appetite, annoying dreams, sleeplessness, general weakness and debility, where the digestive organs do not act as they should.

Mi-o-na is composed of bismuth subgallate, by all odds the very best medicine known for intestinal diseases. It combines with the free hydrochloric acid in the stomach, forming a black substance which is carried off from the body without harm. It also has a soothing effect upon the nerve endings in the stomach.

With this is combined cerium oxalate, a standard remedy in the treatment of all irritations of the stomach and digestive organs.

Sodium bicarbonate is then added to overcome excessive acidity of the stomach. Nux vomica, for its general tonic and nerve-strengthening properties. This combination of reliable remedies makes Mi-o-na a positive cure for all stomach troubles, and, perhaps the only one that can be safely guaranteed. Mi-o-na costs nothing unless it cures.

A large box of Mi-o-na tablets is sold for 50 cents.

If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail postpaid on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your disease and a booklet on stomach troubles which will be sent free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N.Y.

MODEST CLAIMS OFTEN CARRY THE MOST CONVICTION.

When Maxim, the famous gun inventor, placed his gun before a committee of judges, he stated its carrying power to be much below what he felt sure the gun would accomplish. The result of the trial was therefore a great surprise, instead of disappointment. It is the same with the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. They do not publicly boast of all this remedy will accomplish, but prefer to let its users make the statements. What they do say is that it is the most positive cure diarrhoea, dysentery, pains in the stomach and bowels and has never been known to fail. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 27d

THE LACE TRIMMED BLOUSE.

"There is no doubt," says Elise Morlen, in the Ida Ida Woman's Magazine for July, "that the combination of laces and fancy stitches is being overdone, which for many reasons the appearance of lingerie effects at the end of the summer or a recreation to simple styles. While it is still all right, however, its influence is to a many other lines of wearing apparel. Lace has never been more in vogue, and the combination of many different varieties, which has already been mentioned, is greatly encouraged by the manufacturers, who produces in the same piece Venetian and Cluny portions, embroidered batiste motifs on an Irish lace background, or a Valenciennes medallion with a Cluny border. Of course, these are the inexpensive, but a good piece of lace is always a good investment. Making one's own combination for piece or waist front decoration is a less expensive method of achieving equally successful results, especially if one is economical and where to pick up the Valenciennes or St. Gall medallions, Italian cutwork squares, or embroidered wheels.

"Although white is the color for lingerie styles, the introduction of a note of color is greatly sought this season. This is frequently contributed by dainty ribbon embroidery on the design of Valenciennes lace or on the fancy attached flowers. For this purpose the shaded ribbon comes in an extremely narrow width, which, however, is equally suitable for treating even the corner laces in the same manner."

NERVOUSNESS, A CALAMITY.

Many who don't realize what it is, brood, fret and treat all attacks of the "nerves" with indifference. Others consider it a thing to drive away. But in every case nervousness is a calamity. Only when nerves are strengthened that acts through the blood, can it be banished from the system entirely. This fills the blood with nourishment for the inner nerves. Nervousness means death to the unfilled and plenty
